Overall, the Smithereens put on an excellent show to supplement two strong albums. It was obvious that they were up there to have fun, and they let the crowd into it, which contributed to the success. Lead singer Pat DiNizio is simply a great performer and the band plays off his energy to make them work together as an all-around great band. Be sure not to miss them on their next tour. They are set for great things.

harpist KATHLEEN MOON. On the menu will be music by Krumpholtz, Amorosi, Molnar and, of course, the immortal Bolling. It's free, and it's a great taste of things to come.

The Dance Department kicks (yuk, yuk!) off the season on MONDAY, OCTOBER 10 with the first edition of WORKS IN PROGRESS, the monthly program featuring new unfinished pieces by student and faculty composers and visual artists. It starts at 7:30 p.m. in Room 208 of the Dance Building, and it's free but parking's three dollars.

Be sure not to miss the fun next WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12 (I always put important junk in bold type like that) when the guitar duo of ELGART and YATES perform with soprano INGRID FRAUCHIGER in Studio 1655-A of Schoenberg Hall. Give yourself about twenty extra minutes to find the place and look forward to astounding new pieces by Frank Campo, Jack Body and Franz Furrer-Munch. Go familiarize yourself with the work of these people so you can discuss it seriously and make those around you feel left out. The show is free, and you can call the Music Department at 825-4761 if you have questions.

Please, no more questions, fans. Just sit tight and gear up for an amazing year.

Student Committee for the Arts
S.C.A. is run entirely by and for UCLA students and is responsible for:
• producing the best in unique live entertainment at venues all over campus.
• subsidizing tickets to UCLA Center for the Arts productions, making great seats available to students for only $6.
• funding UCLA student organizations presenting cultural programs and events on campus.
As a member of S.C.A., you will:
• share responsibility for managing a budget of over $200,000.
• take part in producing arts events on campus.
• gain an insider's perspective on the entertainment world.
If producing live shows sounds exciting to you, come by the S.C.A. office (downstairs in Royce Hall, room B96) and pick up an application. Membership positions are now open for UCLA Undergraduate and graduate students.

APPLICATION DEADLINE IS OCTOBER 12.

Primitives

Joey howling the vocals, it's Tracy, with perhaps one of the sweetest, most innocent voices to touch vinyl.

Already, Lovely has garnered a number one smash in the U.K. with the single "Crash." And I'm sure those days of anonymity in the states are numbered, judging by reaction to the Brit hit.

The single which best characterizes this album is "Out of Reach," a tune which neither preaches nor teaches — it just is. It's a relief to listen finally to some worthwhile lightweight music.

Listen to these lyrics: "Today I found a four-leaf clover / In the field where I lay / Fear of dying passed right over / Hope they get it right someday / I want to stay / I want to stay." Words like these just make you enjoy life a little bit more.

The Primitives have put together an album which is short, even with its 14 songs, and to the point — the point which states that there's nothing wrong with having a good time and sharing it with the world. And if this debut is anything short of where their future lies, it should be absolutely Lovely.

Lorries

quite a stir, leading to a signing by Beggar's Banquet in England and RCA Records in the states (Not bad for a bunch of rebels).

And so the Lorries have released their U.S. debut, and third album internationally, Nothing Wrong.

And again, the Lorries have proven their loyalty to their reputation. Reed's moan-and-groan vocals, along with Leon Phillips on bass and Dave Wolfenden on lead guitar, keep their raw energy alive.

Songs like "Open Up" and "Hands Off Me!" demonstrate this band's relentless urge to surround the listener with a wall of uncontrollable sound.

For those not into this brutal hypnosis thing, there are a few tracks which would fit into the "pseudo-mainstream" listener's audio vocabulary. Take "Only Dreaming," for example. It's a bit of a depressing love song (but hey, what isn't these days). More to the point, this is perhaps the cleanest track on the album. The trademark Lorry distortion and feedback are toned down for the gentle ear and Reed's vocals are, for once, comprehensible.

Even the title track straddles the fine line between the mainstream and, heaven forbid, the "alternative." But don't get me wrong. Red Lorry Yellow Lorry haven't lost the old touch — that touch which has prevented them from gaining the recognition they deserve . . . until now.

Nothing Wrong is an album which is self-explanatory. There literally is nothing wrong with this third release. Except, maybe, the fact that the Lorries will remain still out of the public eye of recognition. However, I don't believe the Lorries will let that alter their rebellious approach to an industry full of compromises. And there's nothing wrong with that.

'Fences'

they often do in more conventional, sentimental drama. It seems that Wilson, when faced with any of these crossroads, could not go with the brighter one only because he had set himself to write tragedy and so painted himself into the bleakest and loneliest corners. Thus the Tonys and Pulitzer, if not being merely to assuage intellectual guilt (and I reject that possibility as ignoble from groups I hold superior to that) were probably for that dubious integrity.

When, in practically the first scene, Troy astounds Rose with the news that a young mistress she never had an inkling about is bearing his child, their marriage falls apart instantly and is never allowed by the playwright to recover. And it is that phrase, "never allowed by the playwright" that I think so troubling. It is a same lack of logic in all Fences's other situations.

I felt Maxson would accept the blame for his cosmic failure as a sports hero (since that psychological research I mentioned cites Blame the Victim as a powerful influence despite human rationalization). I felt he would applaud the opportunity for his son to vicariously avenge him. I was very unhappy that, seemingly, he screwed his brother again by signing him into a mental institution and kept half his monthly check. None of the scenes that might have explained these anomalies were given us. The second act seemed to degenerate into disconnected vignettes of mumbled exposition with the flat announcement of the latest Maxson outrage as conclusions.

Intellectually, we were left alone to explain things for him. For instance, we know now that athletic college scholarships for Black students largely turned out to be an illusory avenue to success. We have heard the stories how college football teams used them and discarded them without educating them. Maxson's order to Corey to simply find a trade may have been the wisest counsel — from what we know today. I don't feel Rose would not stick up for her boy. I don't believe that Maxson would have ignored the apparent possibility of college money for his son. I still feel that Wilson deliberately forced his characters to forego the option to go for it. So that we would feel bad for segregation.

And I am not prepared for a play in which a father flatly dislikes his son enough to blight his son's chances. (I know such men exist — my father is one.) Wilson never gives us a clue to Maxson's reasons — the reason he gives, Maxson's self-suffered abuse, is actually contradictory. My Maxson would have cherished his son, and savored his triumphs. Without insight into why not, we cannot understand and therefore forgive. Thus the play, for me, fails.

And I am not convinced the fineness of Jones' performance is compensation. However, I hope his back gets better so the fight scene works. Perhaps, if we can believe in the possibility — as we did not last Thursday — that one of the combatants might get hurt, the production might work. It could be as simple as that, but I doubt it.

New Saints find new way to win

By MARY FOSTER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS — The New Orleans Saints, until last season a perennial NFL also-ran, apparently have learned that games are won by beating the other team.

"I think what happened is that we didn't beat ourselves. We didn't do much to create big problems for ourselves," Saints coach Jim Mora said after New Orleans' 20-17 victory over the Dallas Cowboys on Monday night.

"Offensively we didn't hurt ourselves and defensively we didn't give up the easy score, the easy touchdown. We made them work hard for everything they got."

The Saints hadn't enjoyed a winning record until last season's club went 12-3 to earn a spot in the playoffs. Left behind was a losing legacy of mistakes and losses.

The latest victory buried a couple of other long-standing frustrations. It was only the second New Orleans victory in 13 games against the Cowboys and just the second in seven Monday night outings.

"We go into every game expecting to have a chance to win," Mora said. "It's a lot of things — preparation, talent, and the mental attitude — but expecting to win and confidence helps."

New Orleans jumped to a 14-0 lead in the second quarter, only to watch Dallas come back to tie it and then take a 17-14 lead with 29 seconds left on a 39-yard field goal by Roger Ruzek.

The old Saints likely would have been finished, but not so Mora's group.

Mel Gray returned the ensuing kickoff 39 yards to the Saints' 42-yard line. After two Bobby Hebert passes fell incomplete, he connected with wide receiver Brett Perriman, who adjusted a route he had run earlier and got free to catch the ball at the Dallas 32. He went out of bounds with two seconds left.

The offense turned the game over to kicker Morten Andersen, whose 49-yard field goal won it.

The Saints improved to 4-1 and kept pace with the Los Angeles Rams and San Francisco 49ers atop the NFC West standings. The Cowboys fell to 2-3.

Players reinstated

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The National Football League announced Tuesday that running backs Calvin Thomas of Chicago and Charles White of the Los Angeles Rams have been reinstated after serving suspensions for substance abuse.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle allowed the players to return a few days earlier than their scheduled re-entry dates, the NFL statement said. The early reinstatements, the league added, were an accomodation to the players, who have missed regular season games, and their teams.

Thomas and White had been carried on their respective club's non-football illness list after their second violations of the NFL's substance-abuse policy.

Boyer is responsible for initiating the offensive attack of the team, making decisions on where the attack will come from and where it should be directed. Although not a vocal leader, Boyer is a steady and consistent player that always keeps cool in high- pressure situations. This "non-choke" ability will weigh heavily as the Bruins enter the playoffs with a number of freshmen in the starting line-up and in key back-up roles.

Tomkus is the embodiment of enthusiasm on the court. Always vocal and energetic, Tomkus leads the team in providing a spark to motivate the offense and defense. Not only is she the team leader in service aces, Tomkus is also the team's top blocker and one of Boyer's key targets in the offensive attack.

In addition to the solid leadership comes a solid supporting crew for UCLA that should figure prominently against both Arizona State and Arizona. Sophomore outside hitter Samantha Shaver continues to maintain the important role that she adopted as a freshman. At 5-9, Shaver is one of the smaller women on the team but has the leaping ability to attack as well as block. Defensively, Shaver is second in defensive digs behind Boyer.

The return of Jenny Crocker has also been a valuable asset to UCLA. A versatile player that can play outside hitter from either side of the net as well as setter, she is considered "the best sixth man on the team" by Coach Banachowski. As the only other player to have played in a Final Four tournament, Crocker will be an even greater asset down the line as Coach Banachowski looks for experience to guide his green squad through the battles of championship play.

Freshman Elaine Youngs and Jenny Evans play a pivotal role on the team. Since most opposing coaches and players have never competed against them nor seen either freshman play, they must play a guessing game in attempting to counter their attacks and defenses. Evans provides one of the strongest hitting attacks on the court, comparable to Wendy Flecther and Lori Zeno of years past. In addition, Youngs, who is filling in for the injured Rachel Norris at middle blocker, provides one of the most formidable combinations of blocking and hitting ability on the team.

For either ASU or Arizona to expect to defeat the Bruins, they will have to hope to catch UCLA on an off day. As Shaver said, "no one can beat us when we're all playing together at our best."

LETTERS POLICY: For letters, viewpoints or counterpoints to be considered for publication in the UCLA Daily Bruin, they must be typed or handwritten legibly. They should also include the student's full name, major, year, home/work phone number, and registration number. Phone numbers are for reference only and will not be printed.

Dodgers gag

By Jim Donaghy
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES—Gary Carter's bloop double to center field with two outs in the ninth inning scored two runs and gave New York a dramatic 3-2 victory over Los Angeles Tuesday night and 1-0 lead in the National League playoffs.

The Mets had been shut out for eight innings by Dodger starter Orel Hershiser, who came into the game off a record streak of 59 consecutive scoreless innings.

Gregg Jefferies, who had three hits, led off the ninth with a single and moved to second when Keith Hernandez grounded to first. Darryl Strawberry doubled to right to score Jefferies.

Jay Howell relieved Hershiser and walked Kevin McReynolds. He struck out Howard Johnson and had two strikes on Carter. The Mets catcher then blooped a short fly to center that John Shelby, playing deep, failed to catch with a diving attempt.

The ball dribbled past Shelby a few feet and, with the runners moving on the play, McReynolds came all the way around from first and just beat Shelby's throw to the plate.

Game 2 of the best-of-seven series is scheduled Wednesday night at Dodger Stadium, starting at 7:05 local time. The Mets will send David Cone, 20-3, against rookie Tim Belcher, 12-6.

Soccer

ing hard."

It was a long summer of soccer for both players, especially Thompson, who took two trips with the US National team in August to Florida and Texas.

"It wasn't so bad during the summer when we had occasional days off, but now that there aren't many off-days due to soccer and school, I wonder why I didn't relax more when I had the chance."

Coming off of such an eventful summer, the two Bruins had to endure a punishing opening schedule and a 1-3 start this season.

"It was tough losing our first three games, something I'm not used to and definitely something that UCLA's not used to," proclaimed Steadman.

One of many things that the two agree on is that the slow start will pay dividends in the long run.

"I expect nothing but great things from this team. All of the talent is there," stated Steadman.

And from Thompson, "We are really young as a team, but I think that the losses will teach us to pull out the close ones when we really need to."

Only time will tell if the victories will outnumber the losses, but one thing is for certain: If you miss the rest of the season, for some strange reason, check with Steadman or Thompson—they'll have it all on video, with a play-by-play commentary to boot.

How can something so innocent make me feel so guilty?

Does food have a grip on your life? Does it leave you feeling guilty, helpless, out of control?

Do you diet, fast, take laxatives or diuretics, exercise excessively or vomit to get rid of calories?

Chances are, you've never told anybody about this. It can be hard to admit, even to yourself.

But the longer you keep your secret, the longer you'll go on feeling isolated, lonely, and obsessed with food.

If you answer "yes" to three or more of the following questions, call us for a free consultation or more information about our treatment programs.

Together, we'll work to get your life back in control.

Yes	No
☐	☐	Do you feel out of control around food?
☐	☐	Do you spend most of your time thinking about what you eat and how much you weigh?
☐	☐	Do you ever fast or restrict your diet?
☐	☐	Have you stopped menstruating, or are your periods irregular?
☐	☐	Do you vomit or use laxatives or diuretics to control your weight?

A veritable grab bag of sports bits

Oh Yeah

Todd Williams

Well, during this most hectic time of the sporting season, a little Oh Yeah potpourri. . .

UCLA football: a bit too close a call against Washington last week. Sure the Huskies are a good team, probably a bowl team, but if we're supposed to be No. 1, we need to pound teams on the road as well as at home. But hell, I'm as relieved as the next guy.

More good news. . .my fear of Troy Aikman becoming a copy of chokemaster Vinnie Testaverde (five interceptions in the '86 Fiesta Bowl) has subsided. After poor performances in big games against Florida in last year's Aloha Bowl and, most notably, the 'SC game, Aikman proved last weekend that he can handle pressure in a big road game. He also displayed an often overlooked running ability.

With the Trojan shellacking of Arizona last weekend, one has to ask: Are the 3-2 Wildcats any good? Rodney Peete, on the other hand, bounced back from a slow start and is making November 19 look more and more like the day when the Heisman will be decided.

If the Miami Hurricanes are going to lose before New Year's Day, it will be this Saturday at Notre Dame. If they don't start quickly, look out.

Summer Olympics: NBC's coverage was almost universally panned, but before it is too heavily criticized, don't forget ABC's shoddy job in Calgary. I'd take commercials over Frank and Kathy Lee Gifford any day, as long as I don't have to suffer Joe Piscopo. Kudos should also be handed to NBC for laying off of stupid human interest stories such as ABC's coverage of the meeting between East German Katarina Witt and Italy's Alberto Tomba.

One big annoyance was the incessant, confusing jumping from event to event that NBC employed to bring live action to the home viewer. Bob Costas' attempts at late night off-the-cuff levity grew old fast. Boxing, track and field and gymnastics commentary were particularly good, while rowing and equestrian (I admit I'm biased against the equestrian events, as they strike me as being more cruel than boxing) were particularly bad.

The biggest embarrassment of the games, besides some of the boxing officiating, occurred in gymnastics. Why score a competition when "perfect" is par for the course? Perhaps if specific difficulty values were assigned to each move (such as in diving) 10's would not be so ho-hum.

Baseball Playoffs: THE RED SOX ARE FAVORED OVER OAKLAND! Bet the house on the A's. Although the Sox certainly have ample motivation, Morgan's magic seems to be wearing off. Look for Oakland's defense and Curt Young to play a major role. The A's shouldn't choke, but a seventh game is likely. The MVP will be Jose Canseco (with something to prove in light of steroid accusations) or Oakland catcher Terry Steinbach.

Everyone's writing off the Dodgers, and I have to admit I am too. The boys in blue look a little tired, while the Mets seem to be peaking. Tim Leary and the L.A. bullpen are keys, as are the Mets one through three hitters. Look for Mets in six. MVP: New York's Kevin McReynolds.

Some of these predictions may be a little spur of the moment, but what have I got to lose? I'm only enrolled in four units.

All eyes focused on cheerleaders

Leisure Town

Matt Goldstein

Feeling a little too conspicuous, I hoisted my Bausch and Lomb Lightyear onto my shoulder and abandoned my key but exposed vantage point at the top of Janss Steps for the secrecy of the neighboring bushes. I placed the apparatus on a level patch of ground and chuckled at the thought of the alarmingly gullible astronomy professor who had lent me the telescope/tripod combo a couple of years ago. "Beautiful," I whispered, carefully bringing the action into focus.

Below, on the lawn in front of the ROTC building, a large pack of limber sirens was fiercely and noisily competing for positions on the '88-'89 cheerleading squad. I pulled a ham sandwich from my knapsack and sat on a tree stump, my right eye never straying more than an inch from the rubber eyecup.

As I tried to read the hopefuls' names off their pastel sweat-jackets and evaluated the new hairstyles of the veterans, I got the uneasy sensation that someone was watching me watch the tryouts. I stopped chewing and pulled my head away from the telescope.

On my right stood a clean-cut, freckle-faced young man, and opposite him was what appeared to be his identical twin. Both had disapproving looks on their faces, and both were carrying leather-bound bibles. I choked on my sandwich.

"Take it easy, brother," said the guy on my right, placing a warm hand on my shoulder. I managed to get the sandwich down and eyed the pair suspiciously.

"I'm Randy," he smiled, extending his right hand.

"So am I," I said, ignoring his hand, "but who wouldn't be with all this cheerleading stuff going on?"

Randy looked confused and then at his pal. Randy's mirror image opened his Bible, closed it and stared at me. "I'm Rusty," he said.

"I'm sorry to hear that, buddy," I sneered. "Now, how about getting out of here—I've got some serious browsing to do."

"You're a sinner," Randy said flatly, "but there's still hope for you."

"Show me the biblical passage that forbids voyeurism," I laughed, putting my eye back to the telescope. "I can look, so long as I don't touch, right?"

"Listen," stuttered Rusty, "do you want to spend eternity in heaven or hell?"

"That depends," I said coolly, watching a male cheerleader heave a young woman in the air and fail to catch her. "Where are you jerks gonna be?"

"Heaven," said Randy quickly."

I looked up, shrugged and pointed downward.

An amplified voice from the tryouts screamed, "O.K., people, the Bruins have the ball and it's third-and-short. What do you do?"

I peered through the Lightyear and saw three cheerleaders meet in the center of the lawn to discuss the question. After a lot of jumping and yelling, they lined up and began a "hold that line" chant. I pointed the telescope at the coach, who applauded and grinned. I slapped my forehead and took a Suzy-Q from my pack.

"Say, Rusty, Randy," I called, as the two missionaries sulked down the hill, "if your main man will set me up with Melissa down there, make sure that the spirit squad will remain silent during all home games, and guarantee that Miami loses to Notre Dame this weekend, you guys can have my soul."

"Go to hell," they said in unison.

ALBERT POON/Daily Bruin

This cheerleader had no idea that, high above Janss Steps, she had a fan club gathering.

Athletes of the week

Reggie Moore

Much has been made of UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman's third-down scramble and subsequent touchdown pass in the waning moments of last Saturday's 24-17 win over the University of Washington to secure the Bruins' first conference win of the year.

But, in all the commotion, it seems that most people have forgotten who was on the other end of Aikman's 48-yard touchdown toss—sophomore split end Reggie Moore.

Moore was the one who, after catching the pass, swiftly outran Husky cornerback Art Malone to put the Bruins in the end zone.

"I knew I could beat my man," he said. "I'd been telling the coaches all day."

Moore's insistence paid off in his longest reception of the year—and quite possibly what will be among the most important of his career as a Bruin.

Daiva Tomkus

Daiva Tomkus, the junior middle blocker from West Hills, led the top-ranked women's volleyball team to two victories over No. 5 Texas last week.

Tomkus recorded 30 kills, 3 aces, 22 digs and 14 blocks in helping the No. 1 ranked Bruins in defeating the Longhorns. The Bruins are currently 11-0.

The former Chaminade Prep star was a first-team All-America last year as a sophomore and is one of the reasons the Bruins are currently tops in the country.

Last season, Tomkus reached double figures in kills in 20 games, notching 20 in five games and a career-high 30 against Washington State.

UCLA's Will and Bill show is on the air

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

Roommates and teammates Will Steadman and Bill Thompson share common passions—not only for the game of soccer, but for watching videos.

Looking into their video library, one might expect to find movies fresh from the Westwood theaters, or cassettes of the MTV-variety.

As if they don't get enough soccer action during the day, the two players spend many a night watching tapes of recent performances.

"We watch the videos a lot," confided Steadman. "We always ask (coaches) Dean (Wurzberger) and Sigi (Schmid) to borrow the game tapes."

But once the tape ends, the review itself is far from over, for the ensuing conversation is just starting.

"We've stayed up all night talking soccer. In Indiana Will and I didn't get any sleep after the Hoosier game because we were talking about the (2-1) loss," reported Thompson.

"It helps to get things out of your system after the game. Sometimes I don't want to talk, and he (Billy) does, or there are times I will talk forever and he is quiet," added Steadman.

That dedication to the game has made the junior duo fast and firm friends—a relationship that began at a regional soccer camp—and respected leaders of the UCLA team.

With only two seniors on the team, UCLA head coach Sigi Schmid was looking towards his junior class for leadership, and it seems he has found it in two willing sources.

Steadman, an Albuquerque, New Mexico native, finds talking to be a natural part of his personality—one which is revealed whenever he takes to his sweeper position on defense.

"I'm kinda loud and boisterous, which is what I have to be on defense. It keeps me awake and able to organize the guys."

Thompson is not hesitant to open his mouth on the field, but he'd rather rally his teammates by his play as a forward. A forward often goes through more visible periods of bad luck than a defender, and the Santa Cruz High School graduate has his own method for dealing with these streaks.

"I can't allow my individual performance to affect my leadership on the field," explained Thompson. "I can't mope around or take it out on my teammates, because some of the younger players might adopt the same attitudes."

In a recent game against Southern California College, Thompson went through 90-minutes of that patented bad luck. In five shots, the "Wee Man" (Thompson stands 5'3") hit the post, missed two just wide and had the keeper block one point-blank.

The one that actually saw the net was called back—the victim of an offside call—yet Thompson was quick to praise his teammates for a five-goal outburst and did not dwell on his misfortune.

"It was great, a good team game, and it shows the boys are coming around."

While Thompson has been entrenched in his position since he entered UCLA in the fall of 1986, Steadman has wavered between midfield (freshman) and sweeper (sophomore), before finally settling on the latter spot in this, his third, season. Actually, the game plan at the opening of summer camp had Steadman in midfield.

"Things kind of changed—we had hoped to play five midfielders, but the personnel we have play best when I am in the back."

Being that one is a defender and the other a forward, the two often go up head-to-head in practice.

"It's given us a great perspective and keeps the competition out of the friendship, since we don't play the same position," commented Thompson.

"Will is steady, which is also his nickname, naturally, and all you have to say about him is he is steady."

"Bill is one of my best friends, and I respect him as a player and person," stated Steadman.

"It's his ability to go at people (with the ball), and then beat them, which makes him so dangerous. When I defend him in practice I don't let him, or, rather, I try not to let him, turn on me. He's most dangerous there."

Steadman and Thompson honed their skills this summer, playing in the Western Soccer Alliance for the Los Angeles Heat.

"We wanted to get a bunch of UCLA guys to play together," explained Steadman. "There was J.B. Frost, Ray (Fernandez), Billy T. and myself."

"It was a great experience, and my attitude towards soccer changed. I became more positive, always going out and play-

Longaker honored

UCLA All-American pitcher Lisa Longaker of Lakewood, CA (Mayfair HS) was selected as the 1987-88 Honda Award winner as the top collegiate athlete in the sport of softball. The 5-7 junior pitched UCLA to the 1988 NCAA title.

Longaker, the two-time Pac-10 Player of the Year, owns numerous records at UCLA including most innings pitched (259.3), wins (31) and tied the season record of no-hitters with three. Longaker, who ended the season with a 31-4 record, had a streak of 67 innings without allowing a run and is among the all-time season leaders in strikeouts (240) after only two seasons.

Longaker is the first UCLA athlete since Liz Masakayan and Jackie Joyner-Kersee won the award in 1984-85.

"This is truly a special honor for me because the Honda Award represents the biggest honor you can receive in the sport of softball," Longaker said.

Spikers visit Sun Devils, Wildcats

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

The University of Hawaii...University of Texas...Stanford University...University of Illinois...What do all of these schools have in common? They are all top 20 teams that have been blown out by the UCLA women's volleyball team. Now 4-0 in the Pac-10 and 11-0 overall, there are 20 more assorted matches, tournaments and playoffs the Bruins must overcome to reach their ultimate goal: their fifth national title.

The most immediate of obstacles are the Arizona State University Sun Devils and the University of Arizona Wildcats, two strong conference rivals. Last season, the Bruins visited Tempe, only to be handed a 3-1 loss. Currently, the 17th-ranked Sun Devils are 10-3 overall and 3-3 in Pac-10 conference play. The Wildcats dropped out of the top 20 last week with their 9-3 record (4-2 in the Pac-10) but are expected to return after their recent defeat of the University of Oregon in three straight games.

The Bruin team that will travel to Tempe is showing vast improvement over last year's losing squad. Off to their best start since 1983, the Bruins are much more confident and aggressive than in seasons past. Since 1985, the last year that UCLA made the NCAA Final Four, the Bruins have struggled to maintain the consistency and poise needed to progress in the championship tournaments. Injuries and moments of passivityhave forced UCLA to search for new leadership.

This season, Coach Andy Banachowski may have found that new leadership in the form of All-Americans Ann Boyer and Daiva Tomkus. Boyer, a 6-0 senior, is currently considered the finest setter in the NCAA and is a probable pick for the 1992 Olympic team. Tomkus, a 6-1 junior middle blocker, has exploded into the new season with the same passion and desire with which she finished last season.

The heaviest burden of the leadership falls on the shoulders of Boyer. As the only senior, Boyer is one of only two members on the team who have been in a Final Four contest (Jenny Crocker, the other member, currently a junior, missed an entire season with a calf surgery). As the setter,

Bentsen, Quayle clash in debate

By William M. Welch
Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Vice presidential candidates Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen squared off in Wednesday night's campaign debate, the youthful Republican pronouncing himself fully qualified for the high office he seeks and his Democratic rival saying there is no "margin for error" in the White House.

Quayle played the role of aggressor in the opening moments of the debate, constantly turning his answers into attacks on Michael Dukakis even as he defended his own readiness for the vice presidency. "If qualifications alone are going to be the issue in this campaign, George Bush has more qualifications than Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen combined," he said.

Bentsen, who has sharply questioned Quayle's maturity on the campaign trail, said a vice president must be prepared to take over "without any margin for error."

"The debate is about the presidency itself," he said. "The stakes could not be higher."

Bentsen took aim at Bush, recalling the vice president's vote in favor of a budget plan to curtail Social Security cost-of-living increases.

Bentsen wins debate UCLA students say

By Irena Auerbuch
Staff Writer

Across the country, reaction to the vice presidential debate fell largely along partisan lines, but judging by informal interviews in the Cooperage last evening, most students awarded the bout to Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, the Democratic nominee.

"I think Bentsen came across as more presidential, but he evaded the questions," said sophomore Judy Rich. (Indiana Sen. Dan) Quayle resorted to the same petty tactics as Bush — calling Dukakis 'Tax-Hike Mike.' "

Nearly 60 UCLA students watched the debate on the Cooperage's large-screen television, cheering and jeering as they washed down pizzas with soft drinks. Of particular amusement, the audience agreed, was Quayle's response to the question, "What would you do if suddenly called upon to assume presidency?"

His initial reply — "First I'd say a prayer" — drew the loudest hoots of the evening. But when the Republican tried to explain his presidential qualifications, students complained he was not answering the question.

The debate also drew periodic boos, applause and laughter from the audience in the Omaha Civic Auditorium,

CSULB paper funding and publication cut off

By Eugene Ahn
and Shana Chandler
Staff Writers

LONG BEACH — After more than a decade of infighting, the fractious relationship between a student-run newspaper and the Associated Students of Cal State Long Beach may soon come to a permanent end.

The CSULB Associated Students Senate will meet informally Monday to set the terms of a resolution which could dissolve and replace The Union, a weekly student-funded publication.

Funding and publication of the Union was halted by the student senate last week after a controversial satire appeared in its Sept. 26 issue. The three-page satire, entitled "The Grunion: Sexually Frustrated Male Issue," contained phallic images, sexually explicit text and a photograph of three partially nude males.

Some students thought the satire humorous, but other students and some senate members found the piece offensive. In a Sept. 28 resolution, the senate charged that the newspaper was in violation of university codes prohibiting "lewd, indecent or obscene behavior."

Student editors at the Union, however, alleged that those codes do not apply to campus publications, and that the senate violated not only the First Amendment, but its own bylaws when it shut down the newspaper.

Union editors further claimed that the long-standing bitter relationship between newspaper and publisher, not the satire, is the real reason for the senate's move to replace the Union with another newspaper.

"They were bringing in what's happened in the past," said Union editor Gary Stark, who brought his grievance to the senate yesterday. "We were told that the paper was not serving the student body."

CSULB Journalism Professor Ben Cunningham believes that if the editors' allegations can be upheld, "It was terrible timing. They shouldn't have (shut down the paper) after the controversial supplement appeared."

"That's when it became a First Amendment issue," Cunningham said.

Equipment seized

At CSULB Wednesday, members of the Union staff began a sit-in at their editorial offices to dispute the senate's decision and to protect their office from being locked up by the Associated Students, according to Romana Pokorny, business manager of the Union.

The staff protest was announced shortly after Stark disputed the decision at a senate meeting. He brought charges against the senate's alleged violation of bylaws while supporters and opponents of the Union rallied separately outside the senate chambers.

However, the senate upheld its resolution, 11-4-4.

One week ago, Pokorny claimed, CSULB Associated Students President Roger Thompson ordered the computers used by the Union staff to be removed from the office and removed the distribution racks

Supporters and opponents of Cal State Long Beach's student newspaper, the Union, confront each other outside student senate chambers Wednesday. CSULB senate members listened to two hours of student input before upholding a decision to shut down the Union's publishing operations, in a 11-4-4 vote.

ALEX LUCERO/Daily Bruin

Dr. Norman Cousins, noted journalist, health expert, and humanitarian, meets with audience members after speaking in Royce Hall Wednesday.

Cousins gives health advice

Healing expert urges patient-doctor cooperation

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor

Encouraging physicians to "present a diagnosis as a challenge," Dr. Norman Cousins, author of the book "The Healing Heart," spoke on "New Dimensions in Healing" yesterday before a crowd of nearly 200 people in Royce Hall.

Cousins focused on the need for cooperation between doctors and patients in order to attain a positive environment and attitude that would assist in a more rapid recovery from illness.

The lecture was the opening seminar in a series entitled "Moving Into the Solution," which will deal with preventing stress and promoting well-being.

In a delivery punctuated by frequent jokes, Cousins explored reasons why many doctors may be hindered in creating this positive environment for their patients.

Referring to the fact that the single largest item in America's annual health bill is physicians fees, Cousins commented that "doctors patients the worst possibilities for an illness to protect themselves from malpractice suits. "Doctors are being trained by lawyers," said Cousins.

While it is necessary to inform patients of the consequences of their illness, Cousins don't get paid for doing the most important thing . . . talking and listening to patients."

Another factor in creating a negative patient environment is that doctors need to tell their believes that in many cases, dwelling on the negatives is harmful to the health of a patient. "The way the physician communicates has a great deal to do with the success of the case," he explained.

Cousins said that this belief has been proven by the ten years he spent at UCLA talking to nearly 500 seriously ill patients, most of whom had cancer. In most of these cases, the patients' symptoms deteriorated after their diagnoses, leading him to feel that in many ways "diagnosis was the enemy."

UCLA hosts transport fair

By Michael Lawrence
Contributor

For students and faculty seeking transportation to UCLA's crowded campus, the fourth annual Commuter Transportation Fair yesterday was welcomed with anticipation.

The fair, held in Westwood Plaza, provided both students and employees with free information and services about alternate means of transit to the university.

Coinciding with California Ridesharing Week declared by Governor George Deukmejian, Oct. 3 to Oct. 7, the UCLA Commuter Assistance Ridesharing Office (CAR) organized the annual event as a service not only for campus commuters, but for merchants and employees of the Westwood community.

"We started the fair to increase people's awareness of transportation available," said Kathleen Griessel, transportation program coordinator. "The fair is geared to all commuters."

The UCLA Community Service Office provided pamphlets about vanpool services as well as motorcycle and bicycle safety. They also offered free bicycle registration services, discounted bike locks as well as maps of parking lots.

Changes in USAC bylaws requested

BSA proposes redefinition of its campus role, status

Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

The Black Student Alliance called for a change in the Undergraduate Students Association Council Bylaws at a Tuesday night council meeting, while presenting a proposed definition for its status under USAC.

After hearing the organization's comments, USAC agreed to BSA's request to meet privately with each council member.

BSA, currently one of twelve special interest groups affiliated with USAC, proposed a new title of "Underrepresented Student Organization" to replace the current "SIG" designation.

"It has come to light that there is no real definition of an SIG, so we took this opportunity to define ourselves. We did not attempt to define a SIG because that in essence is not what we are. We are an underrepresented student organization," said BSA Vice Chair Ryan Whetstone, presenting the proposal to USAC.

In a statement submitted to the council, BSA writes that "the current 'Special Interest Group' status applied to (BSA) is inappropriate" because "(BSA) works on the behalf of Black students to ensure that all students are equally served by this university."

The changes called for in the USAC Bylaws include designating BSA as a USO rather than an SIG; requiring that all USAC members' responsibilities be written to include working with USOs; guaranteeing each USO its own office;

Daily Bruin
MINORITY SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION

The Daily Bruin is proud to announce our annual Minority Scholarship Competition. Recognizing the need for increasing the number of successful minority journalists, as well as heightening the cultural diversity of our staff, the paper will offer several $1,000 and $2,000 scholarships in exchange for a one-year work commitment to the paper.

Scholarship recipients will spend fall quarter in our New Writer's Training Program, in which they will learn basic news reporting and editing from professional media advisers. Thereafter, recipients will rotate between departments at the paper, serving terms as reporters, copy editors and production assistants. This "apprenticeship" will help us recommend where recipients are best qualified to work.

This competition is open to UCLA students from minority groups, including (but not limited to) Blacks, Asians and Asian-Pacific Islanders, Chicanos and Latinos, and Native Americans.

Applications will be available throughout this week from the Daily Bruin receptionist in 112 Kerckhoff Hall. Don't miss your opportunity to receive valuable journalism experience at one of the nation's top college newspapers. For more information, phone (213) 825-9898.

Applications are due at 3 p.m. on October 14

No sign of hostage release, official says

By Terrence Petty
Associated Press

WIESBADEN, West Germany — A U.S. State Department official said Wednesday there was no sign any of the nine Americans held hostage in Lebanon would be freed soon.

A State Department team today began questioning Mithileshwar Singh, an Indian who was freed from captivity in Lebanon on Monday, in hopes of learning the fate of the Americans, the Washington official added.

The official told reporters at the U.S. Air Force hospital in Wiesbaden this afternoon: "One wants to be encouraged that they (the hostages) will be released, but we really don't know."

Asked about the American hostages, he said: "There are no indications that others are coming out."

The official, who is an expert on hostage issues, requested strict anonymity, although he was speaking at a news conference before several dozen journalists. Television crews were ordered not to film his remarks, and the lights were lowered.

Earlier today, doctors said Singh was "in good spirits" but would stay in West Germany for another three days of medical tests.

Dr. Robert W. Gilmore, head of the Air Force hospital, said a preliminary examination indicated Singh, a diabetic, received adequate medical treatment during his 20 months of captivity.

"He lost significant weight and muscle mass. But he was afforded visits by a physician and treatment was appropriate for his illnesses," Gilmore said.

Gilmore said the kidnappers allowed a doctor to visit Singh twice a week.

He said testing done in Wiesbaden confirmed his previously known problems of diabetes, hypertension and "possible coronary artery disease."

"Overall, Dr. Singh is in good spirits and though very fatigued has traveled well," Gilmore said.

Gilmore said Singh lost 35 to 40 pounds during his ordeal. He said the kidnappers agreed to respect Singh's vegetarian diet.

He said Singh probably would stay for three more

White House denies charges

Assassinations never OK'd, says official

By Merrill Hartson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan never signed intelligence findings or documents intended to authorize assassinations by U.S. agents seeking to combat terrorism, a White House spokesman said Wednesday. Such allegations were made by reporters Bob Woodward and Walter Pincus of The Washington Post yesterday.

Such an authorization would have been a direct contradiction to an executive order that Reagan signed in December 1981 which expressly prohibits such murders, said spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

But Fitzwater did say that there was language in 1984 and 1985 intelligence authorizations which was rescinded in a subsequent intelligence document in May 1986. That language has been interpreted by some as paving the way for CIA agents to skirt the earlier executive order.

Fitzwater denied that the 1984-85 findings could have been interpreted as having authorized assassinations, but the spokesman said he could not say definitively why they were rescinded.

Wright disputes House rule violation

By Jim Drinkard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Jim Wright formally denied to the ethics committee Wednesday that he broke House rules by talking openly about a secret CIA operation aimed at undermining Nicaragua's leftist government.

Wright, in a letter to ethics chairman Rep. Julian Dixon, said his Sept. 20 criticism of the CIA's purported secret efforts to provoke civil disturbances in Nicaragua was based on publicly available information.

Dixon, D-Calif., called the investigation relatively simple, particularly compared to the committee's separate and complex probe into Wright's finances. "It's not that complicated a matter," he said.

"There are two basic elements: what classified information the speaker may have received, and . . . what he said to the press."

It is against House rules to publicly disclose classified information given to the Intelligence Committee.

On Tuesday, the Intelligence panel voted unanimously to grant limited access to its files and personnel for the ethics probe — access that could enable investigators to ascertain whether Wright could have based his comments on material disclosed in classified intelligence briefings.

The controversy began when Wright told reporters, in answer to a question, that "we have received clear testimony from CIA people" about the covert action, which he described as intended to scuttle faltering peace talks between the Sandinistas and the Contra rebels.

In his letter to Dixon, Wright said his reference to "clear testimony" referred to 1985 testimony by "CIA personnel" before the World Court.

Wright did not name the personnel in the letter, but has previously referred to testimony by David MacMichael, a former CIA analyst, before the court in 1985. At the time, MacMichael

Book rebate receives biggest response ever

By Holly Bauer
Staff Writer

In 1987-88 the ASUCLA Book Rebate Program had the highest response in its three year history. Student participation has increased by 33 percent since the program's inception.

A record high of $476,436 was distributed to the 16,214 participants, according to the program's final report. The total amount rebated over the program's three-year existence is $1,336,384.

The book rebate program was introduced to UCLA in fall of 1985 as an attempt to redistribute ASUCLA's net revenue for the benefit of students. Participants can request reimbursements in the form of checks, scrip, or Bruin Gold Card credit.

During designated rebate periods each quarter, colored cash receipts are issued when purchasing textbooks, outlines, study aids, magazines and lecture notes.

Students place receipts in book rebate envelopes, which are collected in boxes in campus stores.

Although participation in the program dropped by 50 percent

STUDENT MEDICAL INSURANCE PLAN (MIP) SUBSCRIBERS CAN INCREASE LIFETIME BENEFIT TO $1 MILLION!

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES UCLA

BERKELEY · DAVIS · IRVINE · LOS ANGELES · RIVERSIDE · SAN DIEGO · SAN FRANCISCO SANTA BARBARA · SANTA CRUZ

Dear UCLA Student:

We would like to remind you of the opportunity that UCLA students have for purchasing the UCLA Student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) along with your registration fee payment each school term (each quarter/semester).

While students have access to the services provided by the Student Health Services (SHS) on a prepaid basis, you need to protect yourself from the high cost of unexpected medical care needs that cannot be provided in SHS - such as emergency illnesses and accidents requiring hospitalization or extensive diagnostic tests. Just one day in the hospital can cost up to $1400 - not including physician and surgeon fees!

All you need to do to purchase MIP is to add the MIP premium noted on your Registration Fee Form to your registration fee payment. MIP will provide you with medical insurance coverage up to a lifetime maximum of $100,000. We strongly urge all UCLA students to be covered under a plan that provides at least this degree of protection. It is a Regental requirement that foreign students must be protected under such a plan.

You should also know that there is a Catastrophic Supplement Plan (CSP) available to students who would like to increase their MIP benefit to $1 Million in lifetime coverage. You must first purchase MIP through the registration process to be eligible to purchase CSP. You can then purchase CSP through a separate enrollment process through the SHS Insurance Office. CSP can be renewed each term within 10 days of having purchased MIP.

The CSP premium is $110 per quarter ($165 per semester) for students, $160 per quarter ($240 per semester) for spouse, and $160 per quarter ($240 per semester) for each child. Enrollment forms can be obtained from the SHS Insurance Office located in Room A2-125, Window 4 of the Student Health Service in the UCLA Medical Center Building.

If you would like to enroll in CSP for the Fall term (and you are already enrolled in MIP for Fall), or if you have any questions or concerns regarding the program, please call the SHS Insurance Office at 213-825-1856.

Sincerely,

Linda Amicarelli

Teaching without texts wins professor award

By Lisa Luboff
Contributor

Textbooks and overhead projectors can't be found in the classroom of Electrical Engineering Associate Professor Asad A. Abidi. He believes in lecturing simply with a blackboard presentation and "at a normal pace a human can comprehend."

Abidi's approach to teaching is unusual, perhaps even unorthodox, but it has earned him the TRW Award for Innovative Teaching at the UCLA School of Engineering and Applied Science (SEAS).

The Electronics and defense Section of the engineering and research firm TRW, Inc., established the award in 1984 to recognize professors in SEAS for excellence and "truly significant contributions" to the art of teaching.

Dean Alan Willson of SEAS is the Chairman of the TRW award Selection Committee which is comprised of faculty, students, and a representative of TRW.

The selection process is based on departmental recommendations within SEAS. Each of the six departments recommend faculty members, and then the recommendations are reviewed by the Selection Committee.

"We feel that this notion of innovation in the name of the award is very important," emphasized Willson, adding that "right away when he (Abidi) first arrived, he began to revise and create courses."

Events planned for Disability Awareness Month

By Deborah Lopez
Contributor

The activities scheduled to begin today as part of "Disability Awareness Month" are meant to expose the UCLA community to the wide range of opportunities available to people who are disabled. The event will also highlight their achievements.

Sponsored in part by the on-campus Office for Students with Disabilities (OSD), the events scheduled for the month of October will include seminars, lectures, films and concerts.

Guest speakers will discuss international and domestic travel packages for the disabled, as well as employment opportunities.

In addition, an art exhibit will feature the works of developmentally disabled adult artists from UCLA and the community.

According to Kathryn Molini, director of OSD, the office provides support and a wide range of services to approximately 730 students who are disabled.

Services include access to Braille dictionaries and encyclopedias, talking calculators, interpreters and note takers.

OSD has developed in the last few years, Molini explained. "We've grown in terms of the increased awareness on the part of the university. There is increased accessibility, and there is a high level of satisfaction with the available facilities among students."

Molini said the purpose of the month was to "provide an opportunity for people with disabilities as well as the non-disabled to experience different kinds of activities that heighten awareness and provide relevant information."

Schedule of this month's activities

These are the events scheduled during the month of October as part of Disability Awareness Month:

'Run for Life' to help L.A.'s hungry

By Keith Roberts
Contributor

More than 2,500 participants are expected to take part in the Third Annual Dennis Weaver/ Valerie Harper 10K/5K "Run For LIFE" and a one-mile Celebrity Walk on Sunday, Oct. 9, according to organizers.

LIFE, Love Is Feeding Everyone, is a non-profit hunger action group which feeds 35,000 of Los Angeles' 1.5 million hungry each week, organizers said. Most of those served are elderly, disabled, children or single mothers.

The group recovers food that would otherwise be wasted at the retail and food broker levels and distributes it to over 70 community agencies. The agencies that serve the food include non-profit charities such as the American Indian free clinic, the Nutritional Program for the Elderly and various Church missions.

Dennis Weaver, recipient of the Presidential End Hunger Award, along with actress Valerie Harper and other concerned citizens, started the chari-

Prohibition, which existed in many of the on-campus residence halls this summer, has been partially lifted at UCLA.

After implementing a "dry" alcohol policy this summer in many of the on-campus residence halls, the Office of Residential Life has released a new alcohol policy for the 88-89 school year.

Possession of bulk-alcohol is still prohibited, but "this year we clarified what this means, beyond simply kegs or large quantities," said Jack Gibbons, associate director of the Office of Residential Life. He defined bulk-alcohol as "excessive amounts under the circumstances for personal use only."

The hosting of a room party where drinking is going on and there are more than two guests per roommate is also a violation, as are "progressives," parties where students move from room to room and consume alcohol.

"Possession of open or visible containers (of alcohol) in public areas or on grounds immediately adjacent to the grounds is prohibited," said Gibbons.

Gibbons indicated that this is different from last year in that now visible or open containers are prohibited, while alcohol in general is not. Just as last year, "anyone who sells, causes to be sold or furnishes (alcohol) is in violation."

As an example of a minor violation, Gibbons said that "if alcohol is in a room, the door must be closed, and it must not be seen from outside, which means the curtains must be closed."

This year anyone who violates other regulations, such as damaging the residence halls while under the influence of alcohol, is also in violation of the policy, said Gibbons.

Under the new policy, a stu-

Experiments with both-sex contraceptive promising

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press

NEW YORK — An experimental contraceptive vaccine has blocked fertility without fail in female and male guinea pigs, researchers report, raising prospects that a similar approach might one day work for women and men.

The vaccine is designed to prevent fertilization, which may make it more widely acceptable than another vaccine already in human testing that stops development of the embryo, other scientists said.

Still, "there are many things about it that would have to be changed or improved to make it a useful method for either agricultural animals or humans," cautioned researcher Paul Primakoff.

Primakoff and colleagues at the University of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington report the experiment in Thursday's issue of the British journal Nature.

It is the first demonstration of contraception without fail from a vaccine, experts said.

None of the 25 female guinea pigs that received the vaccine before mating had litters, nor did the mates of the six immunized male guinea pigs. Animals that received sham immunizations for comparison purposes remained fertile.

The vaccine's effect was temporary. Eleven of 24 females tested had regained fertility by nine to 11 months after the immunization, and all four of the longest-studied group had delivered litters by 15 months. Among the males, four of six had regained fertility by seven months after the immunization.

In a telephone interview, Primakoff said his team has since produced contraception in 17 other male guinea pigs.

The vaccine is designed to DEBATE: Square off

The vice presidential rivals shook hands and smiled as they met at center stage for the beginning of their 90-minute televised debate.

The opening question came from moderator Judy Woodruff, who asked Quayle why he thought he had not made a more "substantial impression" on fellow Republicans, some of whom have openly criticized the Indiana senator. The audience erupted in cheers and boos, prompting Ms. Woodruff to appeal for silence during the high-stakes debate.

But a few moments later, some in the auditorium broke out in derisive laughter when Quayle strongly defended his voting record on environmental issues.

Just as Quayle was asked to defend his qualifications, Bentsen was asked about his differences with Dukakis on such issues as aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, the death penalty and gun control.

"We agree on so many things, on the vast majority of the issues," Bentsen replied, and said no more about policy differences with his running mate. He spent his two minute response saying that he and Dukakis agree on cutting the budget deficit and on a trade policy that will "stand tough for America."

Quayle said Bentsen "didn't tell you very much about what Gov. Dukakis would do . . .

"I don't blame Sen. Bentsen for not talking about Gov. Mike Dukakis," Quayle said. "If I had to defend the liberal policies of Gov. Mike Dukakis I wouldn't talk about it either."

Bentsen and Quayle also clashed on Social Security, an issue the Democrats have used to their advantage in past elections.

"Democrats will protect Social Security," Bentsen said, accusing Quayle of voting eight times to cut benefits and saying that Bush cast a tie-breaking vote against a cost-of-living increase.

Glaring at his rival, Quayle responded, "Sen. Bentsen, you know that I did not vote to cut Social Security eight times." He said he had voted to delay cost-of-living adjustments and that Bentsen himself had voted that way twice.

He said Democrats try "time and time again to scare the older people of this country." Quayle said Social Security should not be seen as a party issue.

Reaction

so much that moderator Judy Woodruff asked for silence.

In Washington, reaction was less colorful but no less subdued. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater described President Reagan as "gratified" by the outcome and said the president called Quayle to congratulate him.

Democratic Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois said, "Neither scored a knockout, but Lloyd Bentsen looked and sounded more presidential."

"I don't think there's any question Quayle made himself an asset to the ticket tonight," said Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, a national co-chairman of the George Bush campaign. "Prior to tonight he was not."

Bentsen's jibe at Quayle when the Indiana senator compared his experience to that of John F. Kennedy drew a mixed reaction.

"Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine," the Texas Democrat told Quayle. "Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

"That was uncalled for, senator," retorted Quayle.

"It threw a chill over the whole debate, a sour note," said Atlanta-based pollster Clairbourne Darden. "It changed from then on, the way you looked at Lloyd Bentsen."

But Democrats said Quayle looked bad when he tried to compare himself with Kennedy.

"I think Quayle's worst moment was when he tried to cpmpare himself to Jack Kennedy," said Democratic Sen. Alan Cranston of California.

"(Quayle) was forced to think for himself, and it didn't go over," said Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn.

Steve Teichner, a California pollster, said he saw no clear winner.

"Because of the low expectations for Quayle, the polls will probably show that Quayle won," said Teichner. "As for whether the debate will help in the overall race, I think it's a wash."

Merle Black, a political scientist at the University of North Carolina, said, "I think Bentsen did a better job. I think the Dukakis ticket ought to be helped by his performance."

However, he also praised Quayle, saying the candidate "performed well enough that the Bush campaign will not have to engage in extensive damage control after tonight. But I think he was outdebated by Bentsen."

Prop. 80 would give prisons $817 million

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the third in a series on the November ballot propositions. Tomorrow: Proposition 81.

Proposition 80

Proposition 80: Provides $817 million for prison construction, part of the continuing prison expansion program approved by the governor and the Legislature. The money would go for construction, remodeling, deferred maintenance and renovation of prisons, jails and youth correctional camps.

SACRAMENTO — The way sponsors of Proposition 80 figure it, the $817 million prison bond measure is a relatively inexpensive way to keep crooks behind bars.

But critics say California should re-evaluate its sentencing laws and consider alternatives to incarceration in order to alleviate severe prison overcrowding.

Supporters, who include Republican Gov. George Deukmejian, Democratic Sen. Robert Presley of Riverside and Republican Assemblyman Larry Stirling of La Mesa, calculate that the measure would cost each Californian three dollars a year for 20 years.

"Is three dollars a year for each member of your family worth it to you to remove convicted felons from your neighborhood and put them in secure state prisons so they won't be able to terrorize you and your family?" the trio asked in a ballot pamphlet argument. "We think it's a wise and safe investment."

Critics accuse the politicians of using "scare tactics" to sell a "very expensive" bond measure.

"There is something wrong when the population grows only 21 percent while the number of alleged felons grows 257 percent over a 10-year period," says a ballot pamphlet argument signed by Ted Brown, chairman of the California Libertarian Party, and two Libertarian congressional candidates.

Proposition 80 would authorize the state to sell $817 million in general obligation bonds for construction of county jails and state prisons and youth correctional centers.

Of that total, $147 million is set aside for a proposed prison in northern Los Angeles County, and $40 million is earmarked for county jails. The governor and Legislature would decide how to divide the rest of the money between youth and adult correctional facilities.

The bonds would be paid over a period of about 20 years. An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would add $650 million to the state's cost.

Despite rapid prison construction, prisons have failed to keep pace with a burgeoning inmate population, as tougher laws incarcerate more criminals with longer sentences.

Since 1981, the state has spent $2.5 billion to nearly double its prison capacity. However, prisons designed for 43,000 inmates are 163 percent over capacity with nearly 72,000 prisoners.

Similarly, Youth Authority institutions are 155 percent over capacity with about 8,300 juveniles for 5,286 beds. County jails throughout the state are also overcrowded.

Correctional authorities have responded by housing two inmates in cells intended to house only one and by converting gymnasiums and classrooms into temporary dormitories.

Prison construction has been financed by voter-approved bonds, state general fund allocations, and lease-revenue bonds that do not require voters' approval.

Another November ballot measure, Proposition 86, would authorize $500 million in bonds specifically for adult county jails and locally run youth shelters.

Cousins

"There is a partnership between the physician and the patient," he explained. "A doctor helps a patient to reach inside themselves for the necessary strength" to deal with an illness.

He believes his personal findings have been proven by medical research. Reports show that depressions due to the diagnosing of potentially fatal illnesses cause a weakening of the immune system, thus hastening the onset of the disease.

Intrigued by this finding, Cousins wondered if the opposite were true, if positive thinking could hinder disease mechanisms.

Cousins decided to test this idea on himself, saying that he felt "the poor rats were overworked." He had two blood tests done on himself with a device which measured immunological capacity.

One of the blood samples was drawn when he was in a normal state of mind, the other after working himself into a more positive emotional state through mental imaging.

"I found that my immune capacity had been improved by 53 percent," he said. "I feel that this opened a wide vista in terms of what we could do in the case of disease."

Cousins believes this immune system reaction points out the enormous potential that the human body has for assisting in its own healing without reaching for drugs and doctors.

"We carry inside us a magnificent apothecary, capable of dispensing thousands of prescriptions," he said.

The weekly series will alternate between north and south campus locations. For more information, call 825-8489.

Vaccine

make the body's disease-fighting immune system attack a protein found in guinea pig sperm. The details of just how that blocks fertility in guinea pigs are not known, Primakoff said.

But immune system proteins called antibodies, taken from the immunized females, prevented sperm from binding normally to guinea pig eggs in the test tube. That suggests the vaccine blocks fertilization within vaccinated females, he said.

In males, the vaccination triggered an invasion by immune system cells of the testicle. That is "not something you would want going on in your body" because of the potential for long-term harm, Primakoff said.

So to produce a human male vaccine, researchers would have to find a way to trigger just the antibodies without the rest of an immune system reaction, he said.

There is no evidence the guinea pig vaccine would work in humans, nor any assurance that human sperm contains a suitable protein target for a similar vaccine, he said.

Richard Bronson, director of the reproductive endocrinology division at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, called the guinea pig research "very encouraging."

had been dismissed by the CIA and was regarded as a renegade, according to Intelligence Committee members.

Wright has repeatedly defended his comments on several levels. He has contended that the comments could have stemmed from publicly available information, but also has said he has a moral obligation to speak out about actions of the administration which he views as wrong.

on campus.

"They took the computers, the printer, the telephones and the freedom of the press, and carried it right out the door," said Second Managing Editor Chris Knepper.

"We (the Union staff) are afraid that something like that could happen again," Pokorny said, referring to a possible move to lock the office and deny entry to Union staff. "We'll stay here as long as we can take it."

Authority questioned

Discrepancies surround the questions of who has the authority to close down the paper, and which branch of the Associated Students serves as the official publisher.

The senate decided to cease publication of the Union, though according to bylaws, the appointed Publications Board must approve of such actions.

"The Publications Board wasn't even consulted," Stark claimed.

Tammy Moreno, a student and a member of the Publications Board, confirmed Stark's statement and added "I forsaw this shit coming down months ago."

"Every semester they threaten to stop funding," Pokorny said. "They can't take the criticism."

Two papers at CSULB

The Union was established in 1977 as an alternative to the Daily Forty-Niner, a newspaper published and funded by the CSULB journalism department.

The paper largely criticizes the Associated Students, regularly contains four-letter curses, and occasionally includes pictures of bare-breasted women.

While the Daily Forty-Niner selects its staff from majors in the journalism program, the Union's editorial policy has been to accept contributions — articles, poetry, artwork — from any member of the student body.

"We had a healthy competitive atmosphere for a while," Professor Cunningham said. "But every year, the editors have changes, and the new cast has decided to go in a particular direction. Sometimes it's pleasing and sometimes its not."

Also, the amount of money the Associated Students budgets for the Union has decreased, Knepper said — from $100,000 in 1977 to a mere $10,000 to cover publication costs for this year.

Knepper estimated this year's costs to publish the union once a week would have amounted to $25,000 had publication not been halted.

dent may receive two demerits, one for violating the alcohol policy and one for the other infraction.

"It used to be that if (intoxicated students) did something wrong they would say 'I was drunk, I didn't know what I was doing.' This year that is no longer an excuse," said Gibbons.

A student is in violation of the policy when he or she "is in such a condition that he or she is unable to exercise care for his or her own safety or the safety of others," said Gibbons.

Penalties for violating the policy can vary, said Gibbons, but there are general guidelines for alcohol violations.

On the first minor violation, an alcohol incident report is forwarded to either the assistant director or resident director (of Residential Life), according to Gibbons.

He added that a letter is sent to the guilty resident concerning the violation, notifying him or her of the alcohol policy and what would happen in the event of future violations.

In the case of a second minor violation, an individual will be called in for an interview; if found to be in violation, he or she will receive official disciplinary action.

According to Gibbons, disciplinary actions include doing community service work, having an alcohol assessment done by Student Psychological Services or attending an alcohol education class, which is being given for the first time by Student Health Services.

After a third violation, "the student will be called in again and (expulsion from the residence hall) will be recommended," Gibbons said.

"If it is a major violation, such as a keg or a large party or a progressive that gets out of hand, expulsion would typically be recommended on the first offense," said Gibbons.

At press time, he was not aware of any minor or major violations which have occurred in the residence halls this fall.

"Last year, there was a lot of student participation in developing the new policy, and I sense that they felt pretty good about it," said Gibbons.

Gibbons indicated that a review of the pilot "dry" program implemented in the summer has yet to be completed, but "staff feedback is that it helped to modify behavior as there were fewer disruptive acts related to alcohol use."

According to Gibbons, the decision on the alcohol policy for future years has not yet been made.

MIT, Structural Engineering. Analyzing and designing bridges. Developed working model of a double spandrel arch bridge. The HP-28S helps him analyze structural stress and geometry. It's the only calculator that lets him do both symbolic algebra and calculus. It features powerful matrix math and graphics capabilities. And HP Solve lets him solve custom formulas without programming. With more than 1500 functions, 32K RAM and both RPN and algebraic entry, the HP-28S is the ultimate scientific calculator.

University of Virginia, Finance. Studies fluctuating stock and money market trends. Assisted head trader in Yen at Chicago Mercantile Exchange. The HP-12C with RPN lets him analyze prices, ratios, net present value and internal rate of return. He can even create his own custom programs. The HP- 12C is the established standard in financial calculators.

UC Santa Cruz, Marine Biology. Studies behavior of blue whales and effect of environment on distribution of marine mammals. The new, easy to use HP-22S has a built-in equation library with solver, giving her access to the most commonly used scientific equations. Statistics with linear regression. And algebraic entry. The ideal student science calculator.

University of Michigan, MBA candidate. Assisted on pricing projects for GM. The HP-17B offers easy algebraic entry. Plus time value of money, cash flows and linear regression to analyze budgets and forecasts. HP Solve lets her enter her own formulas and solve for any variable.

As hunger grows, so does LIFE. The organization is expecting to open a third warehouse/distribution center in November and to feed 60,000 people weekly by 1989, according to a press release.

The run is a part of "LIFE Month," which will also feature a bowling-for-dollars event and a country music concert.

The 5K run will begin at 8:00 a.m. and the 10K at 8:30 a.m. The Celebrity Walk follows at 9 a.m. The participation fee is $14 for each run and $11 for the walk. Participants will get a T-shirt to commemorate the event. Registration must be completed at least 30 minutes before event times.

Admission is free to see the event which is to be held at the Cheviot Hills recreation center, 2551 Motor Ave. in Rancho Park.

Entertainment, free refreshments, vendor samples and prize drawings will also be provided.

Teaching

undergraduate senior level electrical engineering courses: EE118, Integrated Circuit Elements, a course he modified, and EE115D, Applied Electronic Circuits, a course he created. He explained that both courses have a "common theme, as they give senior level undergraduates a taste for the actual practice of engineering."

Explaining that he places a high value on his courses, Abidi said "I have definite views on teaching. I've always felt a big discrepancy between the way engineering is taught and the way it is practiced . . . it is necessary to give students a glimpse of the way seasoned engineers think, which is not necessarily the way they are taught in books."

Intuitiveness and a strong grasp of concepts, rather than formulas, are the two aspects of student learning which Abidi stresses highly. "Beginning students are so overwhelmed with formulas that they cannot get to the intuitiveness and therefore build ability."

The idea behind his courses is to bring together concepts and to provide insight. He claims that his course can ultimately save a student years of experience in the engineering work force.

Abidi believes he accomplishes this goal by being thorough and comprehensible in his lectures. "Concepts should not be disembodied from their context," he said. "One must always present the 'why' and 'how' involved." He emphasized that it is important to make a student understand "rather than mechanically work through equations."
through equations."

Abidi said that he makes a strong effort for his teaching style to coincide with his goals. "I'd much rather express it in English with pictures than in math with formulas," he added. Abidi often finds himself "trying to undo (students') restricted ways of thinking."

Lecturing, according to Abidi, "is a lost art in the universities of today. The essence of a good teacher is lecturing, it is a high quality art form . . . high quality theatrics. There must be elegance, flow beauty of pace — all these things must come together."

Abidi admitted that students need good models to follow. As a graduate student at UC Berkeley, he found himself sitting through boring lectures and thinking of how he could make those courses compelling.

Abidi believes, "the person up front must compel you and entrance you for those two hours." He said that he values teaching in context with respect to the history of ideas.

According to Abidi, the teacher's role is to give added value. "A teacher brings together ideas from a variety of sources, synthesizes, and brings together all of these with analogy and appropriate simplification to convey an idea in a powerful way," he said.

Feeling that textbooks can be a "constraining force" on students, books in Abidi's classes are optional. "The idea of teaching," he said, "is to impart to people knowledge in a way that cannot be relayed in books . . . to bring together concepts in a more informal way."

Straight "A" students often find his courses challenging, he said, explaining it is because the students are "honed like machines . . . not used to seeing problems from a 'seat of the pants' approach."

"I don't know all the reasons for it," he said. "It was rescinded when a new terrorism finding was made in May of 1986. It was omitted, but I don't know why. And then when (intelligence findings) were all reviewed again in May of 1987, it was firmly and specifically omitted."

Fitzwater was commenting on a story saying Reagan signed intelligence authorizations in both 1984 and 1985 giving CIA agents broad anti-terrorism powers. The newspaper said that some administration officials, whom it did not identify, saw the language as a "license to kill."

The Post reported that unidentified White House officials said Vice President George Bush wouldehave been given a copy of or would have had access to the findings.

Bush also denied the report, saying, "If we weren't in polite company, I'd tell you what I thought about a report like that." Asked during an appearance in Littleton, Colo., if it were true, Bush said "Absolutely not. To circumvent the law against assassinations is absolutely criminal."

The Post's executive editor, Benjamin C. Bradlee, deflected the White House remarks, saying, "We stand by our story, and we have no further comment."

Rebate

last fall and winter quarters, response during the spring quarter increased significantly and yielded the overall high participation results, according to Irene Johnson, project coordinator for the Students' Store Director's office.

Specific goals that were established by the Board of Control in an effort to increase student participation were reached, according to Tim Bailey, Students' Store Director.

Graduate participation increased, for example, and more money was given away than in prior years, he said.

ASUCLA Marketing Research conducted three surveys concerning the book rebate, aimed at participants, non-participants, and graduate students.

Whether they participated or not, the clear majority of students wanted the program to continue, Bailey said.

"Graduate students had a confusion between book rebate and book buy-back," he said. "(Book rebate) doesn't mean you have to sell books back, just turn in receipts," he clarified.

The program is funded from available ASUCLA net revenue, Bailey said.

The 1988-89 rebate program is designed to elicit even greater student participation than past years, said Bailey.

In addition to a video, signs across elevators, flyers, and banners, he said, cashiers in the book store are telling people about the procedure.

To continue to increase graduate student participation, the program plans to run articles in the Graduate Student Association newsletter and put flyers in all mailboxes of graduate students, Bailey added.

The number of students participating in the program this year totaled 15, 265.

ROLE

and granting the USO leaders a seat on USAC.

USAC Second Vice President Michael Braun, whose office serves as a liason to the SIGs, did not comment on the request for council seats, saying that several questions still needed to be answered.

"I'm glad they're (BSA) becoming involved in trying to change a process they're unhappy with," said Facilties Commissioner Jason Weiss, adding that he was glad BSA decided to take a route of "moderation in working with council (rather) than hostility . . ."

Weiss also said there are "fundamental flaws . . . in the sense that I don't feel BSA has looked far enough past the underrepresented target groups to try and work with all the special interest groups in coming up with a definition that would serve all the students on campus."

The current USAC SIG definition, dated Sept. 22 of this year states that a group must possess "a unique quality which makes it inherently difficult for any other group to represnt its social, cultural, ethnic and educational interests.

"Such a group must provide services to the University community . . . and educate the University community as to the special and/or unique contributions of its constituents," the definition states.

Braun is in the process of revising the definition. Last year, efforts to reconstruct it were never realized.

BSA will discuss its proposal at a retreat for all SIGs this Sunday, organized by Braun's office, the Second Vice President said.

Fair

Representatives from the Union of Students with Disabilities also attended the fair. Available at their booth were maps of access routes for wheelchairs and information about van services.

CAR hosted various southern California organizations offering transportation services. In attendance were bus company representatives from RTD and Santa Monica and Culver City bus lines, which provided time schedules and applications for monthly discount ticket books.

CAR also offered a free carpool matching service while applicants waited. Fully computerized, the system compiled lists so that UCLA commuters can form ridesharing carpools.

"Each year, as the fair grows, students will have more options," said Charles Carter, Westwood transportation management specialist.

Carter said that as more students become aware of the fair and its activities, the easier it will be for CAR to organize carpool and van services. Carter said that his office is currently developing three new express bus service lines. Planned for operation in early January, the lines will target students from the LAX-Westchester, North Hollywood-Studio City, and Sherman Oaks-Encino areas.

The fair is scheduled to continue today in Westwood Plaza. At 1 p.m., a drawing will be held. The prizes, provided by local merchants, include a Yamaha scooter, two roundtrip airline tickets to San Francisco, and a bicycle helmet.

Why General Electric Products Are No Longer Sold in the Students' Store

Next time you buy a lightbulb or a rechargeable battery in the Students' Store, you may notice a difference: there are no GE products for sale. The omission is deliberate.

After considering petitions from the campus community, ASUCLA's Board of Control has decided that GE just doesn't measure up to the ethical standards we expect from the companies we do business with. We're concerned because GE has failed to sever all its ties to apartheid South Africa. And we're uncomfortable with the knowledge that GE is near the top of the list of companies the Environmental Protection Agency has targeted for clean-up of toxic waste dump sites.

The Board of Control notified GE in June of these and other allegations against the company. GE made a blanket disclaimer, but chose not to respond to any of the specific charges. So we decided to impose sanctions — specifically, removing GE products from our shelves, and, as much as possible, from use within ASUCLA facilities. We hope this action will bring our concerns before GE in a more forceful manner, and lead to constructive dialog with the company.

ASUCLA has always been involved with social causes. In October 1987 we recognized the importance of such concerns by formally adopting an Ethical and Social Responsibility Policy. We feel that GE is in violation of that policy. That's why we removed GE products from our shelves and donated our inventory to charity.

If you would like more information about the Ethical and Social Responsibility Policy, or about the actions the Board of Control has taken regarding General Electric, please contact the office of the ASUCLA Executive Director, 332 Kerckhoff Hall, 213/825-8011.

Don't blame President Reagan for poverty in the United States

By Guido Lionello Del Piccolo

There is a popular saying going around the nation's youth, middle-aged and elderly. The saying is, in almost a joke fashion: "The only thing that Ronald Reagan has succeeded at is in bringing the United States to a third-world level." And typically this is followed by a laugh. I, too, laughed the first time I heard it. But part of this statement is not true nor humorous. The fact that people in the United States are living at a Third World level is true and horrid. The fact that Reagan has succeeded in doing this may be true, I don't know. I don't know if that was his plan. What I do know, is that we use Reagan as a "valve." It is not Reagan who has brought us to this level. It is us. It is you. It is the American people.

With no doubt, I have known that the people in America, the American poor, have been living in the "first world" at below poverty level. This bothered me. As it does most Americans. And I too, blamed the Administration. I too blamed Reagan and his economics. I too blamed the system. I too let my voice be heard as I organized and protested, marching through the streets of Los Angeles both downtown and in Westwood. I too knew there existed a problem. And I too demanded we have a change. Poverty must not exist. But, more so, it must not exist in a place that is so wealthy. A place with so much money. A place with so many resources. A place with so much education. A place like the United States of America.

Spending time in Mexico, opened my eyes just a bit wider. Thinking back on my time down south, I recall some of the writing I did. I remember one piece that began something like this: "I think I just met my first homeless person in Mexico. But it seems that even the homeless in the United States are a little better off than the homeless in Mexico. At least many of them in the U.S. have shopping carts to lug around their few belongings . . ." So maybe, instead of blaming Reagan for poverty here, we should thank him that the U.S. is "better-off" than Mexico. Even our homeless sisters and brothers are "better-off." However, this type of rationalization is absurd in my mind. Absolutely absurd and complete madness. Poverty is poverty. Just as the rationalization of poverty levels is absurd, so poverty itself is absurd. And blaming someone else besides ourselves for poverty is even more absurd. We are to blame.

As we look around our neighborhoods, we are beginning to see more and more poverty. Some neighborhoods have more than others, but even our isolated places are now beginning to rip at the seams with poverty. Poverty can no longer hide. I was driving down Overland Avenue just yesterday. I was in my car driving in protected little Culver City, California. And there it was. It hit me in the face. Poverty in "well-off" Culver City. What I saw was poverty and the Third World, here.

I saw a child, and I say child deliberately, because he was only ten years old, sitting by the side of the road. He held a sign that read: "WILL WORK FOR FOOD." Oh my god! Where am I? My first thoughts went back to Mexico. I must be in Mexico, I thought. But, no, I was here. Here in the United States of America. Here in Culver City. Here where freedom rings. And it does. Freedom does ring. The child of ten years young has just as much freedom as anyone else in this country to starve. Yes, starve. And as I realized that I was not in Mexico, but here in the U.S., I recalled that stupid joke about Reagan that began this writing.

My first reaction was to feel sick. I felt sick for this child. Then, I felt fear. Fear for the future of my children. I don't have any children yet, but I plan to. I thought about my children-to-be and I thought about what I would tell them if they asked me why that child of ten needs to work just to have food. And I contemplated my responses. Would I tell them that it was the child's fault? Would I tell them it was Reagan's fault? I think not. Would I tell them it was the people's fault? Now I must say yes. Yes. YES. It is our fault. Who is Reagan? Some sort of super-human being? No. He is just like you and me. The only thing

The Bible has its fair share of inconsistencies

By (Episkopos) Manichaeus L.E. Tenebrosos

I take exception to Michael Snead's viewpoint of October 3, "The amazing unbelief of so-called believers," and feel very strongly obligated to respond. I am neither a so-called believer nor even a "true" believer, as one suspects Mr. Snead considers himself to be. Perhaps my total disregard for Christian theology (to be contrasted with Christian philosophy, which isn't entirely without merit) means that my views aren't important considering the fact that I live in, as Snead says, a "Christian nation." However, I lead my life under the impression that America was founded on the principles of religious and intellectual freedom among other liberties. Consequently, I feel that my dissemination should be allowed the same opportunity for dissemination as Snead's. I do not doubt that the majority of Americans profess to be Christians, but that is no grounds for calling America a Christian nation, and I am offended by the suggestion.

I do share with Snead a skeptical view of astrology, palmistry and the like, but I don't harbor the same zeal for the Bible as he does. His fervent claim that the Bible is "100 percent reliable and authoratative" echoes very precisely the statements of those same astrologists and believers of Nostradamus he accuses of blind faith. Admittedly, Snead has studied the Bible, and can hardly be guilty of blind faith, so perhaps his article has only "once again demonstrated the folly and fallibility of man."

There are very few logical propositions that can be definitely classified as false. Even statements like "When the Time is near, locusts with men's faces and women's hair, wearing iron breastplates will appear and mercilessly torture for five months, those of mankind who have not the mark of God on their foreheads" (taken after Revelation 9) could be true, in principle, although silly. However, I feel that the claim that the Bible is 100 percent accurate can be shown to be false.

In Joshua 10, Joshua commands the sun and moon to stand still so he can slaughter the rest of the Lord's foes. God obliges him and so "the sun stopped in the heavens and stayed there for almost 24 hours!" I hope it is safe to assume that most of the UCLA student population believes in the heliocentric view of the solar system and realizes that it is exactly the earth's rotation that causes the sun to appear to move across the sky. Thus for the desired effect to occur, the Lord should have stopped the earth and not the sun, although he still would have had to stop the moon, since that does revolve around the earth.

For the purists who point out that the sun is moving about the center of the galaxy at a rapid clip, and the galaxy itself is moving at a sizable fraction of the speed of light relative to other galaxies, note that if the sun and moon stopped, but the earth remained in motion, the consequences would be rather disastrous for both armies as well as the rest of life on earth.

I'm sure many would make the case that this is all semantics, and saying that the sun stood still was an attempt to make the Bible so that people would understand it. Still, they must admit that in this case, the Bible is not literally true, and must be subject to interpretation, and things are no longer as crystal clear as Snead would have us believe. Snead says that "if you're going to play the game, you've got to play by the rules." But whose rules?

There are many more inconsistencies in the Bible, as any chat with a fanatic Freethought member will inform you. Who was Cain's wife? Did God create her and just not mention it? If so, then the Bible is incomplete, and if not, then there were people strolling about without the benefit of being divinely created.

"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." This statement was the direct cause of the incarceration, torture and death of as many as 9 million people. I'm told that the actual Hebrew word is more akin to "poisoner" or "murderer." Also, it's a camel's hair rope and not a camel attempting passage through the needle's eye. Whatever merit the Bible had has been eroded by thousands of years of translations into Greek, Latin and English.

The limits of space forbid any longer list of questionable passages in the Bible, but I think I have won the point. The Bible is at best a flawed work. I rather doubt that this will change Snead's opinion in any way. People will believe what they want to believe: Nostradamus' flub on the earthquake isn't going to make any difference to those that truly believe in him. Nor will I make a change in the life of true Christians by lobbing a few paltry spitwads at the face of God and the edifice of the Bible. A thousand books would not change the minds of those who already know they are right.

Tenebrosos is a resident of Westwood.

Here's to your mental health

Editor:

Coincidentally, the first full week of classes for this new academic year overlaps with Mental Illness Awareness Week (October 2-8). College can be the best time for students. However, over an individual's lifetime, approximately 20 percent will suffer from significant mental illness. Given over 30,000 students at UCLA and each student having many relatives and friends, the probability of encountering mental illness in the current school year is not insignificant.

For the student community, anxiety, depression (suicide), and substance abuse may be particular problems. Also, the onset of schizophrenia peaks in the college years. When these problems arise, a mental health referral should be strongly considered.

that makes Reagan different from you and me is that he is a "valve." A valve for you, for me, and for every person in the United States of America who refuses to face guilt and responsibility. Reagan gives us our valve to blow off our anger, frustration, disgust and guilt. Yes, above all, guilt.

One question I have often asked myself is: "Why can we not eliminate hunger?" I promise you all, if I were to ask 100 percent of the United States' citizens if they were against hunger, 99.9 percent of the people would respond yes. So why haven't we made the necessary changes in the system to eliminate hunger, homelessness, discrimination, violence and injustice? The answer, people, is simple. We have valves. We thrust our energy into protesting the Administration's policies. We thrust our energy into writing our representatives. We thrust our energy into writing for alternative media. We thrust our energy into writing editorials for mainstream media. Just as I am doing. I am writing this meaningless editorial which the newspaper will probably publish. You see, people, these are all valves. Nothing changes as a result of this. It just releases some of the frustration from within me. It doesn't help in eliminating poverty. It is a valve.

Mexico has this "valve system" perfected. I ask myself: "Why has there not been another revolution in Mexico? The quality of life is horrible. The people are crying. The masses are hungry. The intelligencia wants change. The answer is the valves that the Mexican government provides for the educated people. The campesinos are hungry and tired of the system, but most do not have an answer and therefore are not a threat to the Mexican government (the PRI). The threat in Mexico comes from the intelligencia. It is obvious then, how to prevent an explosion from the people. Offer them values. And the PRI does just that. The PRI funds opposition newspapers. They fund opposition political parties. They fund socialist-minded schools and universities. They allow demonstrations. They give the people a voice. That voice is never heard, but it releases the pressures of an otherwise inevitable revolution. But this valve system can only work for a limited time when there is overwhelming disgust and unrest. The players on the top offering these valves get nervous too and make foolish mistakes. The people eventually, then, see their voice goes unheard and their demands go unanswered. And the pressure builds. Just as it did with the recent elections in Mexico. The players got nervous and the fraud exposed in large amounts. But now, the people are not taking over buildings, picking up arms or throwing stones. They are marching and protesting and writing and acting and painting. Using their valves and blaming the PRI, just as we blame Reagan.

The scenario in the United States is not much different at all from that in Mexico with respect to the "valve system." When people have someone to blame, they will. The upper class blames Reagan. The middle class blames Reagan. The lower class blames Reagan. People, you must blame yourselves! Don't blame Reagan. We cannot possibly blame someone else when we continue to act like we have no power. Take power. If you want change, make things change. If you parents are not pleased with childcare in the U.S., for example, stop complaining about it at the same time you continue to send your children to these dehumanizing institutions. When we send our children to daycare, we are supporting exactly what we complain about. We must force childcare to change. Force the centers to hire more people. Force the center to realize their priorities. But force does not mean violence. Please do not infer that. Force means taking power. Don't bring your children and talk your neighbors into doing the same and I guarantee you that before all existing childcare centers close their doors from lack of enrollment, they will make changes. But make things change through your power. Not through someone else's.

I looked through the Los Angeles Times one Saturday morning. What I saw was America's refusal to make a change. I saw America using its valves. Today, there is much unrest here in the United States. But all the energy is going through the valves which the people approve of using. A few headlines make the point quite well: "Dukakis Gets Debate Advice: Drink Juice, Use Elbows," "10 Salvador Villagers Reportedly Slain by Army" (24 September 1988). This last headline fails to mention the fact that the army in El Salvador is totally supported by our government. But, since the majority of the people who are reading this have enough money to buy the newspaper, chances are that you have enough education to know this fact already. Why are the people not in the streets taking some action against this murdering? A more recent article confuses me greater: "U.S. Advisers Fire on Rebels" (27 September 1988, page 2). For some reason, it is my opinion that the majority of us are against another war similar to the Viet Nam war. yet almost the exact same steps are being taken in El Salvador today. Why are the people not demanding withdrawal from unwinable situations? The reason: they can blame someone else. And an even more obvious reason why the people don't take to the streets is, the majority of them plan on seeking refuge in Michael Dukakis as the next president of the United States of America. That is, if he drinks his juice and uses his elbows.

The "valve-system" in the U.S. has never been more apparent to me before as it is in this election year. Dukakis gives the American people a valve and a big one at that. He's "liberal" remember. But more important, he gives us a little relief from Reagan. That's how democracy works right? Wrong. The newspaper also printed a story about the man who is putting up the "It's Your Right: Vote '88" signs (24 September 1988). And initially I yelled at his picture: "First give me a choice!!" But then I took it back and said to myself: "No, it's not someone else's responsibility to give us a choice; it's our job to give ourselves a choice." If you notice, I used a valve when I told that man to give me a choice. But that is wrong. I must take power. I must give myself a choice. We can't just go voting for Dukakis because he is not Reagan's vice president. No way. If Dukakis is our next president, the valve system will have worked just perfectly for the system. That is to say, all those people who didn't like Reagan's policies will have another chance with Dukakis to have a better world. At least he won't be as harsh as Reagan. No, people. If we say that he won't be as harsh or bad as Reagan we are giving levels to poverty again. We cannot place levels. People, the world will not change with Dukakis. Nor will it with George Bush. But maybe if Bush got in there and cracked down hard on freedoms and maybe even closed a few valves as Reagan did, then we might have change. Change comes from the people. Not who we blindly place into the presidency. If Bush gets in there and tells me I can't write this editorial, you bet we might have some changes. Dukakis is no answer. He is just a valve. He postpones the issue of change in America by easing the tension. He is only temporary relief, if that. Bush is no answer either. People, we need change and we need it now. But change from ourselves not a distant president.

The fact is, we must take responsibility for the good in this country as well as the horrors that a country like ours has no reason to maintain. The people being slaughtered in El Salvador are not Reagan's fault. The homeless in Santa Monica are not Reagan's fault. The war in Nicaragua is not Reagan's fault. The horrid injustice in South Africa is not Reagan's fault. It is the people in this country's fault. It is my fault. It is your fault.

The night after I saw that child on the street, I could not sleep. And when someone asked me why that was, I told him because I was crying. "For what?" he asked. "For that child," I said. "No, not for that child; I was crying for the people in this country, and for myself," I added. People, you are responsible for that child. You are responsible for any injustice. Just as I am. Let us face the fact. Let us stop blaming Reagan for our problems. Let us stop giving the problems to someone new like Dukakis. Let us stop running from the horrors we create in the system. Let us stop allowing things to happen in our name if you wouldn't want to have your name on it. Let us stop being afraid of power and responsibility. Let us stop using silly little valves in stupid big papers. Let us stop writing to make amends for everything. Stop blaming someone else!!! And if we have to, like I think we do, let us stop using the built-in valves in the entire system that release the frustration and anger and prevent the eruption, and let us begin to erupt. Valves don't make changes. Valves avoid system-failure. Valves avoid explosions. Valves prohibit building power. Americans, take charge. It is your world, your future. It is my world, my future. Do not deny that of yourself or of me or of anyone. It is your problem. It is my problem. But don't push it off on me. I know. Let yourself know. Don't be afraid of power and take it.

Kremlin shake-up strengthens Gorbachev's reform drive

By Michael Putzel
Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's sudden overhaul of the Kremlin power structure reinvigorates his reform drive and signals his determination to best the bureaucracy he blames for slowing him down.

The Soviet leader's swiftly executed power play Friday and Saturday elevated him to the presidency, put him in charge of the government as well as the ruling Communist Party and left the Kremlin with no clear No. 2.

In action-packed top-level meetings, Gorbachev practically established a mandatory retirement age by pushing all but one septuagenarian off the party's ruling Politburo and sent an unmistakable message through the vast Soviet bureaucracy that he expects a similar pruning of dead wood at all levels.

At the same time, by easing the 79-year-old President Andrei A. Gromyko into retirement with praise and a televised swan song, he opened the way for Soviet officials to leave office gracefully, a necessary prelude to the institution of fixed terms of office for party and government officials.

The sole survivor from the Old Guard is Vladimir V. Shcherbitsky, 70, whose power base built during 16 years as Ukrainian party boss apparently continues to insulate him from Gorbachev's campaign to replace old blood with new.

The new face in the 12-man Politburo, Vadim A. Medvedev, 59, was catapulted over eight candidate, or non-voting, Politburo members to full voting status. He was given responsibility for ideology, which by previous custom would make him second to Gorbachev.

Medvedev, an economist regarded by Western analysts as a proponent of radical economic reform and a member of Gorbachev's perestroika "brain trust," will share equal rank with five other party commission chiefs, four of them strong Gorbachev supporters and reformists.

"It was certainly spectacular to jump him into the senior rank," said one senior Western diplomat, speaking on condition he not be identified.

It was even more meteoric than the rise of another Gorbachev confidant, Alexandr N. Yakovlev, who spent only six months as a candidate before rising to full membership on the ruling Politburo last year.

One Western analyst, also speaking anonymously, cited the historical importance of ideology in the communist system. He predicted Medvedev would be charged with redefining socialism to permit Gorbachev to introduce market forces in the economy without violating the tenets of prevailing communist political thought.

The same source said giving former No. 2 Yegor K. Ligachev responsibility for the farm sector of the economy "is the start of the process of easing him out."

Ligachev, widely viewed as Gorbachev's principal conservative rival, nonetheless is moving to a field the reform-minded Soviet leader considers central to his campaign to improve Soviet living standards. And it is not yet clear how the new agriculture chief will execute Gorbachev's proposals to reinstitute family farming.

Diplomats have noted that Ligachev has spoken often about farm problems in recent months, and the 67-year-old former ideology chief has boasted of his record in improving food production during his years as a regional party boss in central Siberia.

During a stunning televised put-down of former Gorbachev protege Boris Yeltsin last June, Ligachev told the national party conference his old region had been self-sufficient in food for 10 years, whereas "the district where you, Boris, worked for nine years now has food rationing."

The suddenness of Gorbachev's move was not explained. It served as a reminder that his encouragement of open discussion of problems and more democratic electoral procedures have done little to lift the lid of near total secrecy that shrouds the actions at the top of the Soviet power structure.

One diplomatic source said Gorbachev's key decisions may have been approved at an unannounced Politburo meeting on Monday. The party chief then hastily summoned the 300-member Communist Party Central Committee and 1,500-member Supreme Soviet, or parliament, to Moscow to ratify his choices before his plans could unravel.

Cause Célèbre

By Barbara Archer

He worked all summer in the Broadway selling shoes, listening to muzak. She toiled away at the Hot Dog on a Stick in a suburban mall.

Did they have time to keep up with celebrities' summer doings? Did you? Certainly not.

A summer gossip recap is in order.

PLEASE FEED ME, OH YEAH John Lennon, an anorexic hermit junkie? So says this summer's biography of the late Beatle by Albert Goldman, an author who has also penned sordid bios of Lenny Bruce and Elvis. Paul McCartney urged that the book be boycotted calling it "a piece of trash."

Lennon mania continues with this month's opening of Imagine, a documentary about the singer's life produced by David Wolper. Lennon's wifeYoko Ono turned over 100 hours of her personal videotape to Wolper and director Andrew Solt.

HOW TO MARRY (AND DIVORCE) A MULTIMILLIONAIRE

Alex Keaton took the plunge this summer. That is, Michael J. Fox and his sweetheart Tracy Pollan, both 27, wed on July 16th in Vermont.

Meanwhile, the almost three year-old marriage of Bruce Springsteen and his model wife Julianne Phillips crumbled when the Boss took up with his bandmate Patti Scialfa.

The controversy continues with heavyweight champion Mike Tyson and wife Robin Givens who have been married since February. Reports of wife-beating and depression leaked to the press and last Friday night the couple appeared on 20/20 to tell all to Barbara Walters. On the program, Givens said her husband was "a manic depressive".

And this just reported about the pitiful life of former Hugh Hefner concubine Carrie Leigh — her husband that she married five months ago is suing her for divorce. Drug and alcohol abuse on the ex-Playmate's part is said to have been the relationship's demise. Leigh's manager commented, "We wish we could put her in the Betty Ford Center . . ."

THE TRIUMPH OF YUPPIEDOM

thirtysomething, the ABC ensemble show (frequently accused of pandering to the yuppie) which chronicles the lives of people in their 30's living in the '80s, won best drama at the 40th Annual Emmy Awards held at the end of August. Actress Patricia Wettig, who plays a haggard mother whose marriage in on the rocks on the show, won best suporting actress in a drama. Other notable wins — The Wonder Years, a nostalgic look back at the '60s from the point-of-view of a young boy, won best comedy series and Michael J. Fox accepted up his third statuette for lead actor in a comedy series saying that "Alex Keaton (his character on the NBC series Family Ties) proves that Dan Quayle can exist." ABC took the most awards winning 21 Emmys, while CBS won 20 and NBC picked up 19.

STAR BUCKS

The National Enquirer mathematicians have been hard at work figuring out the hourly wages of the stars (no doubt from the recently released list of highest paid entertainers by Forbes Magazine). The tabloid reports that Bill Cosby rakes in $27,403.85 per hour while the average full-time worker in the U.S. makes $24,857 a year. Other makers of obscene amounts of money include: Madonna at $12,500 per hour; Mr. Jackson (if you're poor) takes in an hourly wage of $14,904 and sharing the wealth; Phil Donahue, Oprah Winfrey, Bruce Willis and Prince all make (individually, that is) $3,846 every 60 minutes.

UCLA Theater opens '88-'89 season

By Emmett Loverde
Contributor

UCLA's Theater Department invites you to ESCAPE to any of the amazing variety of productions that highlight its 1988-89 season, including A Chorus Line, Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing and two plays to be performed by the new Laboratory for Theater Research and Performance: Hippolytus and The Changeling.

A Chorus Line is perhaps the most joyful tribute to the spirit of the American Musical ever written. The show takes place at a "cattle call" audition for the chorus members of a Broadway musical.

The dancers, all nervous and hopeful, are learning one of the dance numbers that the final production contains. Some get eliminated from the audition, all make mistakes and tell the "choreographer" about themselves and why they want to be in the chorus.

The characters are based on the experiences of actual Broadway performers. One auditioner is a former Broadway star who has fallen "out of favor" of late and wants to dance in the chorus once again, despite the blows to her ego and talent the experience could deal. Another young man is a former drag queen who desperately wants a shot at 'legitimate' theater.

And one dancer joyfully relates the changes in her professional (and sex) life before and after getting plastic surgery in the hilariously provocative number "Dance: Ten; Looks: Three." Director Gary Gardner also directed Stephen Sondheim's A Little Night Music last spring, and the year before his original production of Bottoms Up! won the ASCAP Award for the Best New Musical of 1987.

This fall, guest Professor William Glover directs Much Ado About Nothing, Shakespeare's hilarious tale of a man and a woman who have sworn mutual hatred, and who are literally tricked into falling in love with each other. The script is the Bard at his quickest, with outrageous mix-ups and gloriously witty insults flying at every turn.

One of the new programs emerging with the transformation of the Department into the School of Theater, Film and Television is the introduction of a year-long "Laboratory for Theater Research and Performance."

Hackett feels that currently there exists no workshop for intensive study of the art of Theater at UCLA. The Laboratory will be a full-time workshop offering students twelve units of course credit and a schedule lasting from two p.m. until ten or eleven at night, Monday through Friday during spring quarter. Students are accepted into the Laboratory through an audition process, and begin activities this fall by attending a series of lectures and performances at Royce Hall by visiting companies from around the world.

The final project of the Laboratory will be interpretations of two classics: The Changeling and Hippolytus. The Changeling, written in 1622, combines two tales of intrigue, infidelity and murder with music by Nathan Birnbaum. Hippolytus is the Roman saga of the incestuous love Phaedra had for her stepson Hippolytus; it will be performed in the style of the period, with all roles sung and danced as well as what Americans call "acted." As part of the Laboratory curriculum, the two plays will be performed on alternate evenings in May and June to provide the performers with a true repertory experience.

Other productions being cast include Sam Shepard's Curse of the Starving Class, James Barrie's The Admirable Crichton, and Luigi Pirandello's Right You Are (If You Think You Are).

Curse of the Starving Class is the startling story of a Southern California family who have all they need . . . yet hunger for ever more unreachable dreams as their lives slip past. The play is directed by Theater professor Michael McLain, who directed Romeo and Juliet at UCLA last fall.

The Admirable Crichton tells of an aristocratic London family whose yacht is shipwrecked on a deserted island. The drastic circumstances allow the family's butler to become ruler of the island, with his former master serving him as court jester. The actors in the play will be studying the class mannerisms and accents of England in connection with the play. It is directed by George Schaefer.

Pirandello's best-known work Right You Are (If You Think You Are) is a comedy about an Italian widow who suspects her son-in-law has kidnapped her daughter, while the son swears his mother-in-law has gone mad and mistaken his new wife for her deceased daughter. The play is being directed by MFA candidate John Rando.

Tickets to all the above events are available through the Macgowan Hall Ticket Office (825-2581). Right You Are runs November 11 through 19; Much Ado, December 2 through 10; A Chorus Line, January 20 through 28; Crichton, March 10 through 18; Curse, April 14 through 29, and Hippolytus and The Changeling are alternating performances May 28 through June 9. Student, faculty and staff tickets are three dollars apiece, general admission tickets are five dollars apiece, and a subscription series is offered for twelve-fifty (call for details).

KLOS' Mark & Brian breathe new life into radio

By Marlene Casillas
Staff Writer

At last, Southern Californians can enjoy the daily drudgery of the early morning grind.

The "Mark and Brian Show" on KLOS 95.5 FM alleviates the tensions of bumper-to-bumper commutes with a funny and fresh approach to radio.

The natural and ingenious style of Mark Thompson and Brian Phelps, heard weekdays from 6 a.m. to 10 a.m., offers welcome relief from the synthetic disc-jockeys currently polluting the airwaves.

While other radio personalities subscribe to the school of prefabricated programming, Phelps and Thompson embrace the doctrine of improvisational comedy.

Rick Dees imitates supercelebrities like Sylvester Stallone and Michael Jackson. Thompson and Phelps actually attempt to phone notable newsmakers. And they do it merely for the challenge of reaching unaccessible people.

When Wayne Gretsky joined the Los Angeles Kings, for example, Thompson and Phelps embarked on a quest to get Gretsky on the phone. They asked listeners to help locate the hockey star, pooling together money to lure Gretsky away from the rest of the media.

They succeeded in reaching Gretsky and the escapade was amusing.

Quick-wit and perfect timing distinguish Phelps and Thompson from the competition. In an age of pre-recorded entertainment, "Mark and Brian" are live, not Memorex. This spontaneous flair allows their routines to veer in unknown directions.

If ideas are unsuccessful, the pair quickly admit it.

"The key to our show is honesty," said Phelps, "we'll be the first to tell you 'we're suckin' and we're suckin' big.'"

When a gag stinks, they feel terrible, he said.

"You can hear the radios clicking over to other stations because they're all clicking over at the same time."

The honesty appeals to listeners, said Thompson. In fact, audience participation is a major ingredient of the show.

The duo often begins with a designated format, such as "Mark and Brian's Freeway Love-Connection," or "Mark and Brian's Olympic Phone Follies." These pieces depend on listener interaction.

During "Freeway Love-Connection," Phelps and Thompson try to match commuters. They encourage drivers with car phones to call and report possible date prospects nearby.

The theme from The Good, the Bad and the Ugly plays during the routine. Convincing the pursued to pull-over or tune into KLOS is the trick. Yet, successful or unsuccessful, the game is always fun.

Callers always allow the pair to showcase their spontaneous cleverness. Phelps and Thompson can toss sharp one-liners with lightning speed.

People love to call them for everything and anything.

One man once called for help convincing his fiancee to abandon elaborate wedding plans and elope. They did, and she agreed.

Letters to the Arts & Entertainment Editor

Dear Editor,

It is with sadness that we, the undersigned, mark the passing of a Daily Bruin institution. No, this will not serve as a belated testimonial to that Back Room Grouch Emeritus Art Atkinson, now merrily slogging about the backwoods of Ontario, scaring the fish and grumbling about the damn mosquitoes.

This is rather to mourn the death of Bruin Review. In the spirit of lowest common denominator and enforced artistic illiteracy, the current Bruin staff has seen fit to abandon the Review name in favor of Arts & Entertainment, one allegedly more understandable to the teeming masses. ("Of course," we say, smacking our foreheads with our palms in synchronized contrition, "to counter semi-literacy we must become semi-literate ourselves.") This, thankfully, appears to be a renegade decision by the A & E staff. Just think, Viewpoint could have been renamed Letters & Comments; Sports could be rechristened Football, Basketball, Track & Maybe Soccer; News could be known hereafter as A Few Stories with Some Facts & Information that You Might Find Interesting. Why single out Review?

To so humble Bruin Review into something as arresting as plain-wrap mayonnaise may not be a crime of the magnitude of calling Lancelot du Lac "Lance," or Mount Everest "The Big Rock in Nepal." Bruin Review wasn't the journalistic equivalent of Moby Dick (although, given the mean Review sentence length, maybe Proust would be a better analogy), but the section was alive — a mishmash of the heartfelt and the rabid, of urgent seriousness and coltish enthusiasm, of aesthetic theories and personal opinions — in a word, reviews. Bruin Review was also a springboard to potshot careers as professional media writers, and a damn fine place to waste 30 hours a week bullshitting about life and art, and trying to figure out how to pass Geology after not going to class until the sixth week.

But for 1988, Bruin Review's jealously guarded, free-flung spirit of chance and improvisation has been tossed out in favor of bland conformity; the Arts & Entertainment tag is just the last nail in the coffin. Bruin Review — gleefully, maliciously independent; thorn in many an overly serious Editor-in-Chief's side; the section that nobody could, or would ever want to, control; an obstinately free forum for nascent ideas and opinions — is now a simple, well-behaved checklist of campus Arts & Entertainment. Review is dead. Long live Review.

With sadness,

P.S. Isn't the Daily Trojan's so-called section also called Arts & Entertainment? Just asking.

Editor's reply: I never thought changing the name of this section would cause such furor. After all, don't people read the section for its content, not its name?

True, the title changed. But we changed it for a reason. The name Review, old and proud as it was, did not reflect the range of content in the section. Besides reviews, we print interviews, feature stories, calendar listings and columns.

Arts & Entertainment was not my favorite name for the section. But after wracking our brains for another title that better represented the thrust of the section — How about "Style," "Waves," "Vanguard," "Arts & Culture," "Spotlight," or "Essence?" — we settled upon Arts & Entertainment.

Admittedly, A & E is not as flashy as some of the others. But I'm more concerned about the quality and diversity of the writing than the name of the section it appears in.

I also believe this section should be an integral part of the Daily Bruin as well as part of campus cultural life. Rebellion has its place, in entertainment as elsewhere, but revolt should not inhibit our paper from informing people about the arts & entertainment world. To serve that function properly, this section must be part of, not apart from, the paper.

It's time we stopped serving ourselves and started coming down to earth and thinking of our readers' interests.

Moreover, in browsing my campus directory I noticed that a few past review editors still attend UCLA. I would welcome and appreciate their contributions! After all, Review by any other name would smell as sweet.

'Another Woman' another masterpiece by Woody Allen

By Gregory Keer
Contributor

For most fans of Woody Allen's comedies, the thought of Woody's bespectacled presence remaining behind the camera for his second consecutive drama is disappointing. Indeed, the idea of a movie about a suicidal woman surrounded by equally "lost" family and friends kept droves of Allen supporters away from last year's interesting but hopelessly depressing September. Still, for those who are willing to sip the soup after that initial dramatic burn, the Manhattan-based auteur has prepared an unusually satisfying and potent film for thought, called Another Woman.

Allen's seventeenth motion picture as a writer/director tells the story of one middle-aged woman's revelation that after 50 years of existence, she isn't who she thought she was. Marion Post, played with exquisite detail by Academy Award-nominated actress Gena Rowlands, is a college philosophy professor who goes on sabbatical to write a book.

But trying to concentrate on writing her German philosophy text in a Manhattan apartment, she is bombarded by the voices of psychiatry patients that drift in through the heating vent from the office next door. The emotional unraveling and soul-searching of one particular young woman (Mia Farrow) becomes an obsession of hers: one that instigates and also parallels her own self-evaluation.

Up till now, she has been content with intellectual pursuits and achievements, denying herself any real emotion in her life. A prime example of this kind of lifestyle shines through her choice of husbands. Her current mate, a cardiologist named Ken Post, is meticulous and insensitive (a role made icily penetrating by British actor Ian Holm) with whom she "reads books and has stimulating conversations." She chooses to stay with Ken despite the potential for passion with her hubby's best friend, Larry Lewis. Gene Hackman (surprise!) warms up the screen as the imaginative romantic who tries to make her leave Ken.

As is to be expected in any psychological drama, we discover that many of Marion's problems are rooted in her childhood. During a visit that she takes with Ken's 16-year-old daughter (Martha Plimpton) to her dying father (John Houseman) in upstate New York, she is reminded that it was her historian father who stressed academics above all else. In one lushly photographed flashback scene, we learn that her father's favoritism toward her created a lifelong jealousy from her under-achieving brother.

Throughout the film, a mysterious element of chance brings Marion into more disturbing aspects in her life which she must resolve. She accidentally bumps into a long lost friend whom she had recently been thinking about. Marion goes out for a drink at Manhattan's famed Chumley's Bar with her actress friend (Sandy Dennis) and her director husband and soon finds out the reason for their parting of ways so many years ago.

It is also by chance that Marion keeps seeing Hope, the psychiatric patient whose revelations she continually returns to her office to hear. She sees her walking past the brownstones of Manhattan early in the film and later finds her in an antique shop. She asks her to lunch and in talking with her, Marion begins to make some headway in her own personality crisis.

Woody Allen's third dramatic film (the first was 1978's Interiors) marks the most assured and artistic accomplishment of his career. His characters are fully realized and colorful, especially his women. Always a student of the Bergman and Fellini school of film expression, Allen employs a touch of mysticism and magic in this very real drama, highlighted by a play-within-a-play scene in which Marion sees part of her life enacted in a darkened theatre (actually, the renowned Cherry Lane Theatre) before her.

Assisting Woody in his efforts is longtime Bergman collaborator Sven Nykvist, whose photographic skills enhance the movie's themes. His frames

Was (Not Was): (L to R) Sweet Pea Atkinson, David Was, Don Was, Sir Harry Bowens

Was (Not Was) pop (not pop)

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

"Boom boom acka-lacka lacka boom" "Boom boom acka-lacka boom boom"

Pretty bizarre, huh?

Well, you've probably never, and I mean never, encountered a band like Was (Not Was) before — at least not for the last five years.

City Limits pinned these Detroit natives "dance music's dada terrorists."

And Billy Bragg has referred to them as "the true inheritors of the Motor City Soul Sound."

Not to mention the fact that the singles "Spy in the House of Love" and "Walk the Dinosaur" (the previously mentioned lyrics) have successfully conquered the British and Australian top ten.

Well, Was (Not Was) is definitely something unique, but I don't know if these sensational descriptions do the band justice. And I believe Don Was (alias Donald Fagenson), one half of the Was brother team and one fourth of the band, would agree. Arts & Entertainment recently caught up with Don on their current U.S. tour to learn what has occurred during a five year hiatus.

"Basically, we've rebuilt a shattered career . . . Well maybe that's overdramatizing a bit." Bassist/composer Don Was explains this with a nervous laugh, almost as if he can't believe what he's saying.

The bassist, along with partner David Was (a.k.a. David Weiss), suffered an untimely and unfortunate setback in early '84 due to contract conflicts from their previous label Geffen Records.

"Okay, this is what had occured. When you last checked with the Was brothers five years ago, we put out this album (Born to Laugh at Tornados) out on Geffen (Records) with many lead singers (Ozzy Ozbourne, Mel Torme, and Mitch Ryder to name a few)."

Don pauses to assure me that "the band was always the band," despite the array of performers contributing their talents.

Problems mainly arose for Don and his flutist/lyricist partner with Geffen preferring a different sound — namely a disagreement over the Was' two dynamic black vocalists Sweet Pea Atkinson and Sir Harry Bowens.

"Well, Geffen thought they had something (after Tornados). They said, 'Let's make this a straight rock 'n' roll band — get rid of the black singers. Get a couple of white guys in there and we got a rock band.' "

So two and a half years later, after sloshing through one too many legal battles, the Was brothers finally bought out their contract and began anew.

"They wanted us to be something other than who we are," Don reiterates with a tinge of anger in his voice. And his fiery opinions don't stop there. "I think that the music business is littered with the carcasses of people who attempted to change who they are, or disguise who they are, to become something they thought would sell more records."

Obviously, Was (Not Was) wasn't about to become one of the wounded victims of "selling out." So Don, Dave and company set their sights on the U.K. in search of respect for the music they lived and loved. And the highly successful album What Up, Dog? with the smash single "Walk the Dinosaur," available domestically on Chrysalis Records, was the result.

But What Up, Dog?'s story doesn't begin just with a move to Britain. "The foundation, when we first started, was to have a pre-funk/soul sound with several new and ironic twists layered on top."

That doesn't sound too innovative in '88. However, Don adds, "It seemed like a timely anti-technology statement back in '84, and we did a whole album of that, when we got the 'get white singers' ultimatum."

So a move to Britain resulted in a more pop-oriented album, rather than a heavily funk/soul collection. Don doesn't feel that this was a drastic change or mistake, though.

"Now, we feel comfortable writing pop songs. It's an honorable enterprise, not some low-life art form which requires a challenge. So we said, 'Let's rise to the challenge,' instead of

SPIKE'S L.A. BEAT:

The unsigned hero

By Jill Stein
Contributor

In a town whose major industry is entertainment, almost everybody here is involved in it in one way or another. And the rest of us are subject to and influenced by it. We're in the test site for all the latest that's trash or treasure in the popular arts.

Los Angeles will always be the setting of rock-n-roll myths. The city attracts the ambitious and talented with the promise of stardom. They are followed by as many different stories of triumph as of humiliation. Many illustrious careers have been launched here, from the Doors to Guns & Roses. L.A. fans get to witness the making of some of pop music's most important figures.

Since I'm an L.A. native, and a fan, I tend to be proud of the city's musical heritage. And fascinated by the machinery of it. Seeing what's come out of L.A. over the past years, I wonder — What Next! What does it take to be the latest musician to make it from local gigs to MTV? What combination of talent and luck gets a band signed? And who here is doing it?

This article is first in a series profiling the Los Angeles pop music scene, with features on both artists and the record business. Here's a look at Danny Tate who will be playing at UCLA later this quarter.

The unsigned hero

Danny Tate is definitely up in line for Next Big Thing. In the six months of his band's incarnation, they've been packing the house each weekend; word of mouth is spreading; and industry insiders regularly show up to check out the buzz. When I finally caught the band at the Music Machine last month for myself, I was impressed enough to want to see them again the night after at the Palomino.

A Danny Tate gig has the feel of event. Besides all the industry heavies and hopefuls who come, what's with all the pretty women? Well the guy's got PRESENCE. Tate opens the set on solo acoustic guitar, and when the band bounds on stage with him for the chorus, the chemistry is undeniable.

They've got talent, a lot of attitude and looks. No gimmicks. And Tate writes great songs. But what really comes across is — feeling. That's what people respond to.

Danny Tate's is just another story, but it's a good tale of what it's like to be a struggling musician in this town. I had a chance to talk with Tate and the band at their rehearsal studio, and again at a sound check before a Club Lingerie show.

Son of a preacher man

Danny Tate's story reads like a promotions department's dream. His biography is real pedigree. The son of Baptist ministers, born in the same Southern Arkansas town of Bear Bryant and Johnny Cash, Tate's musical upbringing began in the family gospel tradition.

"My whole family was real musical," recounts Tate. "I grew up playing music and singing in my family's church, and I also composed for the school choir." He graduated from a private college with a degree in music theory and a love for 20th century classical composers like Bartok and Stravisnsky.

"I guess I was kind of a late bloomer when it comes to rock 'n' roll," said Tate. But the move was only natural from his roots in gospel and country. One summer vacation Tate picked up guitar and entered a local talent show. "It was the first time I'd really done a rock thing," he recalled. "I couldn't believe it, when I got on stage all these girls started screaming." He won the contest and found his calling.

He spent the next 2 years touring high schools around the U.S. and playing some 600 solo acoustic shows. Switching to electric guitar in the early '80s, Tate felt ready for Nashville.

No Opry Boy

The capitol of country proved a challenge. The climate at the time, before the renewed interest in the likes of the Fabulous Thunderbirds and the Georgia Satellites, was not vary favorable to Southern rockers. "I had to work odd jobs for a while, and play these seedy after-hours clubs," Tate said. But fans eventually caught on. "It was great," recalls Tate. "We were the biggest draw on the Nashville club circuit."

But the record companies weren't biting. So Tate released an album on his own Gravity label, Sex Will Sell. Although it received noteworthy praise in Billboard magazine, the album died without major label distribution.

who signed Poison to Capitol, heard a demo tape of Tate's, and urged him to try L.A. Tate came out last year, and quickly drew a make shift band of local luminaries with which he hit the LA clubs.

"I got together with Charlie and Marshall from the Cruzados and Warren from Iggy Pop and Charlie Sexton's band," he said. The combination smoked, and attention turned to the New Kid in Town. "There was a lot of industry hoopla around those gigs," said Tate. But the band split up after a couple of months, when the players went on tour with their respective groups.

Defying Gravity

During that time, Tauro got Tate a publishing deal with Island Records — meaning that his material gets "shopped" to other artists. Tate's songs appear on some recently released albums, like "The Wild One" on Mystery Street by John Brannen. Tate wrote "Someday Someway" for Jeff Healey, whose Confidence Man is now on its way up the charts. He also collaborates with other artists like John Kilser and L.A. mainstay Jimmy Wood.

But since Tate wants an album with his name across the cover, he's now out proving it with a band of his own.

His music is power rock with solid, driving rhythms, overlaid with ringing guitars. Tate's singing is passionate without being overblown. He's been compared to John Cougar Mellencamp; his work has that same heartfelt quality. There's a definite touch of Duane Allman and Texas Boogie to some of Tate's songs, reveal somber colors of browns, beiges, and rusts, depicting the fall season and the autumn-of-life melancholic thoughts of Marion. Equally influential on the film's technical prowess is the smooth and terse editing of Susan E. Morse who keeps up a brisk pace for what could have been a plodding storyline.

Of the actors the filmmaker employs, only Mia Farrow, who has completed eight films with the man who fathered her youngest son, has worked with Allen before. Several performers come through with their best work in years as a result of their collaboration with the often difficult director (he fired nearly the entire first cast of September). Especially good are Hackman, Holm, Plimpton, and Philip Bosco who turns in a brief but forceful performance as Marion's first husband. But the highest praise belongs to Gena Rowlands in portraying her character as someone who might easily fall apart, given the pounding her ego suffers, but manages to set a new course for her life. The lady deserves another Academy Award nomination for this brilliant acting accomplishment.

While September was deep almost to the point of drowning, Another Woman raises us above the water as Allen and his characters arrive at some enlightening conclusions. The masses may not turn up to this film, but dramatic film fans and Oscar should be smiling on Woody Allen as once again he brings dignity to the subject of mid-life crisis.

Tate

but don't stop short at the Southern accent. He writes polished, danceable, straight-ahead rock — could be classic Stones or Petty. And he's not afraid of a quirky synth line, either.

Unchained Dignity

Tate seems to sing about two things — freedom and romance. According to the musician, his music is about "youthful rebellion" (to me, it sometimes sounds a lot like sex). And Tate doesn't write message songs, although it seems a must for good press these days. Life is simply what he champions. "I want to inspire passion," he said.

He doesn't claim to have all the answers, but he's in there with you. A sample lyric from "Wind of Change":

The hands of time go round and round,
They don't slow down when you lose your way.
At every turn the things you learn,
You wear them proud like you wear your name.
And as you go on down that road,
Don't let the dust get in your eyes,
That blows in the wind of change.

According to Tate, "Being called the next big thing is like the kiss of death. There are a lot of pressures and expectations playing in an industry town." It can get tricky to balance commercial viability with artistic vision. The record companies spend as much time watching the market and each other as they do the talent — it's a waiting game.

"You can lose perspective playing L.A. Sometimes I feel encumbered with the industry types at the gigs all the time," he said. Tate likes getting out of town, where both he and the audience are not so self-conscious.

In the meantime, he's courting the system. And he seems to have the right moves. So what are Danny Tate's chances? A lot may depend on what some record exec eats the day he comes to see the show. The whims of the business are hard to predict. But if you want to make your own call, go down and see him when he plays here next month.

And with that challenge, a more confident brand of Was melodies and band members took shape.

"I think we've learned where our strengths are. You know, on our first albums, we tried to hide behind production techniques and weirdness. This year, when we just go out and play — let loose and be who we are — it goes over just fine. I guess when you go to a place far away from home, you become a little more exotic."

Well, this brings us back to boomin' and acka-lackan', the product of exotic locale. From Don's serious nature, you'd never suspect the wickedly direct humor in the music of the Was.

"Love Can Be Bad Luck" is a perfect example: "When two cars crash / You just pull them apart. / But when lovers come together / They get tangled heart to heart."

David is the off-beat lyricist who concocts these sometimes ludicrous yet often realistic descriptions of the world around.

Don chuckles quietly to himself. "They're basically (David's) observations. (Although) they may not have happened to him — maybe to others he has observed. It's the way he tells it that makes me enjoy working with him so much. He portrays these things in such a unique style."

This stands true throughout this album of everyday life, love and pit bulls. The story of "Shadow and Jimmy," about two friends looking back on a life filled with more talk and less do, presents by far my favorite description of the "Oh well, that's life" situation.

"Men without women are like fish without / water to swim in. / With their eyes bugging out / they flop on the beach / And look up at the girls / Who are just out of reach." Sheer poetry.

Incidentally, "Shadow and Jimmy" was co-written by none other than the great king himself (or I should say the second king) Elvis Costello. Apparently, an accidental meeting of David and Elvis in the Hollywood Tower Records on Sunset set the foundation for this hilariously sad tale of life gone by.

And if you ever want to know what really goes on in the minds of Don and David, take a stab at the avant-jazz/spoken word pieces "Earth to Doris" or "Dad I'm in Jail."

"That's kind of the barest revelation of our souls. I think it's a pretty good reflection of our perspective." That's a scary thought, considering the deliriously-crazed voice screaming "Hi Dad, I'm calling from jail. Hi Dad, Happy Birthday. Say hi to mum from jail. Jail." Like I said, pretty scary.

But don't let the obscurity pose a fright to what is one of the most "unique" albums of '88. "I think one of the criteria we like to apply to our records is, would anybody else have made this record."

I don't think so.

And with that, Don left me with a reassuring thought. "I think we're a little older; we're not a pop band that's going to be around for a couple of years and then just disappear (five years of silence and WHAM!, What Up, Dog?, reassure that). We're looking for a career in art — to find our vision."

Don, I hope you, Dave, and the rest of the Was (Not Was) crew do.

KLOS

Thompson have electrode the airwaves enough to double their ratings share in less than one year.

In addition, the pair has created an impact large enough to attract national attention. Electronic Media, a trade publication, recently chose Mark and Brian as one of the five hottest deejays, or deejay teams, in the country — an honor no other disc-jockey in Los Angeles or California can boast.

And it is no mystery why their popularity is still growing.

The "Mark and Brian Show" is addictive.

A compulsion to stay tuned to KLOS for fear of missing one of their "comedy bits" eliminates frustrated station-hopping. Although the station lost listeners who want only music in the morning, it attracted new ones.

Mark and Brian joke that long-time KLOS devotees, dedicated to rock 'n' roll, merely tolerate them between the music. But crazy stunts, pranks and contests entertain audiences and inspire fans to join the buffoonery.

A crane once lowered Thompson and Phelps into a vat of chocolate as on-lookers threw peanuts on them.

The two once broadcast an entire show from a 7-11 as people ate petrified hotdogs, frozen burritos and other disgusting food items to win money and prizes.

Unique consolation gifts — awarded to callers with bad jokes or stories — are now highly sought-after. Despite the avalanche of sports tickets, concert passes and money giveaways available from KLOS, people always seem to prefer "Mark and Brian" pickle-pickers, knee-pads and Beanee Weenees.

High-jinks and the "C-Word"

Unlike Alabama, Southern California contains a wealth of opportunity for high-jinks.

In-studio guests are popular. Thompson and Phelps frequently interview television stars from favorite re-runs. Everyone from Christopher "Peter Brady" Knight to Henry "The Fonz" Winkler has visited their show.

"Part of what made us so close was that we're both T.V. babies," Phelps said. "We both grew up loving those old black and white shows."

However, this celebrity-enriched area has a downside, said Phelps. The team now calms down tongue-in-cheek ribbing of famous personalities.

"The stars are here and they're listening," he said. "And their lawyers are listening."

Mark and Brian enjoy more creative freedom here than in Alabama. However, the "suit dweebs" and "legal-suit dweebs" of ABC (their bosses) still impose restrictions, Thompson said.

"If they had it their way, we'd be doing elephant jokes and traffic," said Phelps.

Since arriving, the comedians have stretched the boundaries of permissibility. Social consciousness prevents them from spilling into bad-taste "shock-jocks." AIDS jokes, death jokes and drug jokes are off-limits.

"Ethiopia jokes are not our style because they're just not funny," Thompson said.

Community awareness is reflected in the program. A condom campaign humorously reminds people to practice safe-sex. "All of the Lakers were wearing condoms last night," they said after an NBA championship game.

In Los Angeles, they say "wear a condom" everyday. On-the-air in Alabama, however, the "C-word" was forbidden.

"We are really screwed-up as a nation if we can't promote something safe for our children," Phelps said.

Phelps and Thompson enjoy radio because it is theater of the mind. They are interested in television, but only if both agree on the project.

"It has to be an extension of the show," said Phelps.

For now, the boys will be taking the show on he road. The "Mark and Brianmobile," — a convertible 1965 Cadillac Coupe-de-Ville with white wall tires and batman wings — is ready for those days when staying in-studio seems too boring.

ΦΚΣ
During the infamous Connelly Campaign of 1872, a loyal but shell- shocked band of Phi Kapps, ex-members of the defunct Confederate Army, fought on, oblivious to the Civil War's end. These brave, but somewhat deluded soldiers, convinced they were surrounded by enemy forces, did the only honorable thing they could....

AND THUS WAS CREATED SILVER SKULLSHINE

This intoxicating brew proved to be not only the cause of their original delusions but also enabled them to fight on until the outbreak of WWI where once officially inducted into the US armed forces, they were instrumental in the downfall of the American moral standards. In honor of these beleaguered Phi Kapp warriors and all other Phi Kapps who have "battled" throughout the ages, the brothers of ΦΚΣ ,UCLA invite you tonight to partake in the rituals associated with this 116-year old tradition.
Prepare for battle!
The Yankees are expected at 9:30.

ASTRO•GRAPH

Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

Oct. 6, 1988

This year something of tremendous significance will completely revise your philosophical outlook. New views will strengthen your character and expectations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) People you are dealing with today might lack direction and purpose, but this isn't likely to be true of you. You'll know what you want and, more importantly, you'll know how to get it. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be alert today for unusual financial opportunities. Something profitable could suddenly spring loose out of the blue.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Today, you have a marvelous touch for taking the ideas of others and reconstructing them into something more promising. This could be especially true in two instances.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may be drawn into something today that has strong, competitive elements. Fortunately, you'll be the one with the odds tilted in your favor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Someone of considerable significance is about to enter your life. It's possible that an old friend might introduce you to this person today.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) If today's objectives are clearly defined, your chances of achieving them are excellent. Be definite regarding your goals, and don't let outside influences get you off target.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's imperative that you have faith in yourself and your ideas today or else a minor setback could cloud your mind with negative thoughts and make you less effective.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If a financial development is presently running in your favor, don't let it drag on. Try to do something conclusive today that will lock it down.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you're willing to make concessions when dealing with others today, they'll respond in kind. However, they are only apt to act upon your cue.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Financial trends continue to look favorable again today. Make doubly sure that you are capitalizing on these fortuitous influences.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) A situation may arise today where you'll find yourself competing against one who always tries to outshine others. This person will fall flat.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Flow with events today instead of trying to alter their course. Conditions look good, provided you don't rock the boat.

Pac-10 football power

By Herschel Nissenson
Associated Press

No, that's not a misprint in the Pac-10 standings.

Yes, UCLA is 4-0 overall and ranked No. 2 in the nation.

Yes, Southern Cal is 4-0 and ranked No. 3 in the nation.

Yes, the West Coast is drooling over the prospect of their Nov. 19 showdown.

But wait. Oregon is 4-0, too, and ranked No. 18.

This is not uncharted territory for the Ducks. They are in the Top Twenty for the second week in a row and they also made it once last year (No. 16) when a 34-27 victory over eventual Pac-10 champion Southern Cal gave them a 4-1 record before a four-game losing streak did them in en route to a 6-5 finish.

But before that, you have to go back all the way to 1970 to find Oregon in the Associated Press rankings. And the last time the Ducks appeared in a final AP poll was 1965.

"Our followers and fans and students have kind of accepted that last year was not a fluke thing," says Coach Rich Brooks, who inherited a string of six straight losing seasons when he took over in 1977. "We established that we were a good football team a year ago. This team is for real and won't fade away."

Oregon's six-game winning streak is the longest in the Pac-10 and the school's longest since the 1964 team won its first six games after the 1963 club finished with four straight victories.

Not many people think the Ducks can make it 5-0. Saturday finds them a 15-point underdog at Southern Cal. Oregon isn't a household word when it comes to the Top Twenty and the Ducks probably will be without quarterback Bill Musgrave.

Brooks pretty much summed it up last winter at the NCAA's annual College Football Preview in Kansas City when he spoke right after Coach of the Year Dick MacPherson of Syracuse got through entertaining the troops and quipped, "This is kind of like Twiggy following Dolly Parton."

Oregon hasn't exactly played creampuffs to get to 4-0. The Ducks handed Washington State — a team that has trounced Illinois, Minnesota and Tennessee on the road and beat Stanford by four points, just like Southern Cal did.

Brooks says Oregon's program has come "light years" from when he arrived.

"There's quality in our program as far as talent, depth and credibility," he says. "We're a very good football team. What we're trying to do now is take the step from a good team, which we've been the last four-five-six years. We've been a respectable team, and if we're able to win on the road against USC, it would put us in the upper echelon.

"It's pretty hard not to be happy being 4-0 at this stage of the season. USC has the psychological advantage with their 100-year centennial celebration. We beat them last year, so they're going to be ready to play, and I believe we'll be ready to play them."

Think Big Think Future
Think Varian

With Fortune 500 status, worldwide operations, and 12,000 employees, Varian Associates is considered to be "mid-sized." And that's fine. We prefer to think big in terms of achievement. In communications, medicine, defense, science and semiconductors, our performance rivals that of firms far larger. For example, we've won Research & Development Magazine's I-R 100 Award for product innovation 72 times.

Winning awards confirms what we already know. Our innovative professionals are making technology work—in cancer therapy equipment, advanced gallium arsenide devices, computer control strategies for high power satellite ground stations, and other meaningful applications. Market-driven, we're always thinking about tomorrow's possibilities. And, with group environments sized for action, we excel at turning possibilities into realities.

There's much more to tell about the involvement, visibility and diverse opportunities that Varian offers business and engineering graduates. And we'd like to tell you in person about those opportunities in areas such as manufacturing, quality assurance and test.

So if you have big plans for your future, think Varian. Varian's Campus Manager will discuss professional opportunities at our presentation on:

Tuesday, October 25, 1988

New Kings look better on the ice

By Ken Rappoport
Associated Press

After leading Edmonton to four Stanley Cup championships in five years, Wayne Gretzky has moved his high-scoring act to Los Angeles where he leads the Kings against the Detroit Red Wings tonight.

Eight other games are on tap as the NHL begins its 72nd season.

Gretzky, the NHL's most famous player, will be joined by other new faces as the revamped Kings hope to improve both on the ice and at the game. Besides Gretzky, the Kings acquired right wing Marty McSorley, left wing Mike Krushelnyski and defenseman John Miner in the blockbuster deal with the Edmonton Oilers.

Other off-season acquisitions by the Kings include forward John Tonelli, a free agent from the Calgary Flames, and defenseman Steve Richmond, a free agent with the New Jersey Devils. On Monday, the Kings acquired two more defensemen in the NHL waiver draft — Jim Hofford from the Buffalo Sabres and Dale Degray from the Toronto Maple Leafs.

"Obviously, we can't help but improve with the acquisition of players such as Gretzky, McSorley, Krushelnyski and Tonelli," Kings general manager Rogie Vachon said. "Not only does their experience mean something on the ice, but off the ice, too.

"Four of our newly-acquired players have won Stanley Cup championships and have the knowledge of what it takes to be a winner."

Gretzky, McSorley and Krushelnyski all have been on Cup winners in Edmonton, while Tonelli was on four Cup winners with the New York Islanders.

In other openers Thursday night, it's Toronto at Boston, Quebec at Hartford, Montreal at Buffalo, New Jersey at Philadelphia, the New York Rangers at Chicago, St. Louis at Minnesota, the New York Islanders at Calgary, and Winnipeg at Vancouver.

The Oilers, going after their third straight Stanley Cup and fifth in six years, begin the regular season on Friday night when they play host to the Islanders. Pittsburgh and Washington will open their seasons in a Friday night game at Landover, Md.

The Kings will not only have a raft of new players on their team, but a new uniform as well. Bruce McNall, who acquired the majority ownership of the team from Jerry Buss, has switched from purple and gold uniforms to silver and black.

Vachon, however, recognizes that it will take more than new uniforms — and even more than Gretzky — to completely make over the Kings, a long-time NHL doormat.

"We still have areas where we need to improve," Vachon said. "We have to play better defensively and must have a team commitment to improving our goals-against average."

As for the Oilers, they'll have a new look, too. No Gretzky.

Without Gretzky, the Oilers may alter their style somewhat to play a more defensive game, much like they did when the star center was injured last season.

Boggs K's as A's nip Boston 2-1

The Associated Press

BOSTON— Pitching and power, Oakland's strengths in the regular season, carried the A's to victory in the playoff opener against Boston on Wednesday.

"We can hit the long ball and we can shut you down," said Dave Henderson, who drove in the game-winning run with an eighth-inning single in the 2-1 victory. "We can win any way we have to win."

Jose Canseco hit the only long ball for the A's with a fourth-inning home run, his fourth off Boston's Bruce Hurst in 27 career at-bats.

Canseco, who endured taunts from the Fenway park fans for most of the chilly afternoon, said he didn't hit the fastball on the inner part of the plate very well. Still, it went over the left-field wall.

"Sometimes I just try to hit fly balls here because the wall is so close," Canseco said.

The A's slugger said he wasn't bothered by the fans' chants of "steroids," which began immediately after his homer and were heard again several times. At one point, he turned to the fans in right field, shrugged and smiled.

"It wasn't a big deal. I was just trying to have fun," he said.

"I've heard so many rumors, it doesn't bother me. I just don't want to have any distractions."

A week ago, following the steroids scandal that disqualified Olympic runner Ben Johnson, Washington Post writer Thomas Boswell alleged that Canseco has used steroids to develop his physique. Canseco vehemently denies ever using the drug.

Canseco warned that the Red Sox need to win Thursday night or the series is over.

"They're going to have to think now about going out to Oakland," he said. "It's a big ballpark and we play well there. If they drop two here, they're in big trouble."

Otto named Seoul MVP

The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — East German swimmer Kristin Otto, thefirst woman ever to win six gold medals in one Olympics, received a gold crown Monday as most valuable player of the Seoul Games.

The Paek Sang crown, made of 20-karat gold and designed after the headgear of ancient Korean warriors, cost $11,000, its donors said.

The award, presented by the Korean newspapers Hankook Ilbo, Korea Times and Daily Sports, takes its name from the pen name of the late Chang Key-young, a member of the Korean Olympic Committee and founder of the three newspapers.

Although this was not an official award of the International Olympic Committee, the winner was chosen by a panel of four IOC members — Kim Un-yong of Korea, Anita DeFrost of the United States, Pal Schmitt of Hungary and Jan Staubo of Norway — and Chun Byung-kyu, chairman of the Paek Sang Foundation.

relatively few errors,'' he said. ''We weren't as productive as I would have liked us to be against Fresno State, especially in the first half. We did come back in the second half and played the type of offensive football we have become accustomed to this year.

''Defensively it is going to take good hard hitting and steady performances throughout. We will also have to play better than we played at any time on defense. In the games that we have won our defensive has been good, but we will have to play as well as we possibly can on defense.''

The Beavers will also rely on their new and improved running game, something that over the past few seasons was ignored because of the almost non-stop passing from the Beavers BYU-style offense.

''We really stressed the running game this year in spring practice,'' Kragthorpe said. ''In years past, we would throw the ball, sometimes nine or ten times in a row. But we realized that we have good backs who can play, and so it was just a matter of re-emphasizing the running game.''

The biggest threat facing the Beavers is obviously Aikman, who charged ahead in the Heisman race after his clutch performance in the come from behind victory over Washington. Aikman, who grabbed 9 of 10 votes in the Scripps-Howard Heisman Trophy poll and is rated No. 1 by Sporting News, has thrown for 815 yards and 10 touchdowns, despite playing in full games in only two of the Bruins first four games. The senior from Henryetta, Oklahoma has a 14-2 record as a Bruin starter, and has never lost at the Rose Bowl.

''Aikman is probably as good as any quarterback in the country. I think everyone has him up in that category. He is an outstanding quarterback. He has a good arm, good release and he is smart player and has poise. I don't think he lacks anything you would want in a quarterback,'' Kragthorpe said.

The Bruins will also look for a big game on the ground. Kragthorpe can only hope that his defense can fire up for the contest, as they are yielding over 362.0 yards per game, including an average of 169.2 yards per game on the ground.

If this is how the Beavers plan to dam up the bruising Bruin offense, they may look more like the Dutch Boy with his finger in the dike.

''One thing is for sure'', said Kragthorpe. ''This is the best UCLA team I have seen since I've been at Oregon State. It will take everything we have, flawlessly executed to beat them.''

Peerless Boyko picks 'em again

The Clairvoyant One

Lee Boyko

LSU @ AUBURN (-1)

Tigers, Tigers burning bright. William Blake must have had Auburn in mind, not LSU. A two-game losing streak has put LSU's Sugar Bowl hopes on hold, and early season wins against pre-season top twenties Texas A&M and Tennessee look less impressive as time passes. Auburn is undefeated and living up to every milligram of its No. 4 ranking. Quarterback Reggie Slack is posting Jeff Burgerish numbers, and the Tigers play 7 of 11 at home. A close game in Baton Rouge, but since it's not.

Pick: AUBURN

OHIO ST. @ INDIANA (-7)

Could have been billed as the Volatile Coach Bowl but Bobby Knight is in the wrong sport and Woody Hayes is no mas. Indiana will again vie for the Pig-Pen Conference title. The losses of all-conference performers wide receiver Ernie Jones and linebacker Van Waiters have been absorbed by this heretofore hoop power. Coach John Cooper, who turned his back on ASU for the prestige of Ohio State, will have to build from veritable scratch. The Buckeye's last-breath win over LSU two weeks ago was 90 percent luck, 10 percent talent.
Pick: INDIANA

MICHIGAN ST. @ MICHIGAN (-13)

I'll dispense with the Big-10 bashing only after saying, 'Who else but Michigan could have blown that 16-point mid-fourth-quarter lead over Miami, as Bruin jaws dropped in simultaneous horror. Number One: so close, yet so far.' Although State has yet to win a game, at least they've shown. . .uh. . .well. . .um. . .they haven't shown much, have they? A team returning virtually intact from last year's Rose Bowl winner has been an embarrassment. The jury has reached its verdict. Lorenzo White did mean that much.
Pick: MICHIGAN

WASHINGTON (-2) @ ARIZONA ST.

In Washington the Sun Devils face someone similar to their Nebraska foe of two Saturdays past—a bigger team. They should consider arming themselves with A-1 sauce as the beef marches in their direction. Washington dispelled the Huskies-can't-play-on-a-sunny-day myth by taking the Bruins to the limit in a game they should have won. Quarterback Cary Conklin conjures the leadership qualities of past U of Dub standouts Tom Flick and Steve Pelluer.
Pick: WASHINGTON

OREGON ST. @ UCLA (-27)

How many times this season will Troy Heisman have to snatch victory from the bicuspids of defeat? Maybe once or twice more, but not this week. The Pac-10 is the second best conference in Division 1-A football but not because of Oregon St. Not even Eddie Haskell or Lumpy Rutherford could save this Beaver.
Pick: UCLA

OREGON @ USC (-15)

Trojans due for a letdown? Naaaaah. SC's only conference loss in '87 came at the hands of Rich Brooks' feisty Ducks. Revenge alone should be enough of an edge for the team that, until further notice, must suffer the humility of being No. 3 nationwide but only No. 2 citywide. Last week at Arizona, Rodney Peete bolstered his Heisman status with an impressive performance, including the best fake handoff since the IOC feinted a precious-metal ducat in Ben Johnson's direction. Running back Steven Webster, defending Pac-10 rushing king, is back, and the Trojan offensive line is no longer a question mark. Still, 15 points is too much to give a top-twenty conference opponent.
Pick: OREGON

NOTRE DAME (-6) @ PITT

Notre Dame is as undefeated as anyone and could argue top-three status. The Irish have doused the Big-10's best (yawn) and the Pac-10's mediocrity (not so yawn) and, like SC, look to avenge one of three '87 setbacks. And while we're talking eye for an eye, Notre Dame's Foge Fazio gets to defensive coordinate against the school that fired him from his last head coaching position. Pitt has physical blockers but suffered a come-from-ahead loss to upstart West Virginia, a state whose only noteworthy contribution to sport was Zeke from Cabin Creek, Jerry West.
Pick: NOTRE DAME

JOEL CONARD/Daily Bruin

According to Lee Boyko, this painful scene should be a common one for Beaver quarterback Erik Wilhelm when Oregon State takes on the Bruins this Saturday.

Cross country faces CSUN

This is a good place for her to start."

And start is a welcome change for Brown, who has spent too much time running to doctors instead of running for the Bruins lately.

From the first legs of her UCLA running career, Brown, a native of Ontario, Canada, showed promise. As a freshman she placed eighth at the Western Collegiate Athletic Assn. meet. But by June of 1987, she was off the course and on the operating table.

Surgeons removed calcium form her right achilles tendon that had built up after years of running. She began comeback number one in the fall of 1987 and finished 17th in her only cross country outing. A UCLA track meet in March '88 would be her last competition for six months.

In May, she again went under the knife. This time, calcium deposits were scraped off of her left achilles tendon. So Saturday, comeback number two begins.

"It's been pretty frustrating because I've really believed that I can be okay in this sport," Brown said modestly. Despite the frustrations — Brown admits that she got more than mildly depressed — she refused to run away from cross country.

"I love running so motivation hasn't been a problem,"

And maybe the psychology major in her has helped her find the right track through her injuries. "Hopefully, it's made me realize that life goes on after running."

According to Messina, Saturday's Matador Invitational provides an opportunity for other Bruin runners who haven't had a chance to run varsity.

Slated to run for UCLA Saturday are seniors Brown and Kathleen Hopkins, and freshmen Laura Andeen, JoAnn Arnold, Andrea DellaMonica, Marissa Gardella, Jena Haggenmiller, and Debbie Phillips.

Results: 3-1 loss, 2-1 loss, and 3-0 loss respectively, for a composite 0-3 record before defeating Connecticut, 1-0.

Since then, the Bruins are 4-1-1. And what about those three teams they opened up with?

Evansville is the No. 20 team in the nation, Indiana is ranked No. 6, and Indiana has vaulted to the top position in collegiate soccer.

Someone has got to talk to the schedule maker. . .

Big loss: Forward Lucas Martin, who redshirted last season to play for the Junior National Team, has left the squad due to academic reasons.

Martin tied for leading scorer honors during his freshman season of 1986 (7 goals, 5 assists) and was voted Most Valuable Offensive Member along with Jeff Hooker.

His presence will be missed by the Bruins, both as a leader and a scorer.

Cover girls: Catch this week's Sports Illustrated with Florence Griffith-Joyner and Jackie Joyner-Kersee gracing the cover?

For those keeping count, that makes 75 covers with Bruin athletes, which stands tops in the nation by far, according to UCLA Sports Information.

Just for comparison, the Men and Women of Troy have appeared on 49 covers throughout the 34-year history of Sports Illustrated.

This news caps an impressive week for Bruin athletes, if you will recall the news that UCLA, were it a country, would stand 11th in the world in terms of Olympic medals.

Bulletin-board material: Trojan quarterback Rodney Peete was quoted in Sports Illustrated as saying, "USC doesn't play teams like San Diego State and Long Beach State," a not-so- subtle bag on UCLA and its 1988 football schedule.

What Rodney doesn't say is that in 1989 the Trojans square off with Kansas— one of the worst teams in the nation, Utah State—from the Big West, the same Conference as Long Beach State—and Ohio State—from the Big 10, enough said.

Yes, the Bruins are in the middle of a 10-year contract with San Diego State, which is not as bad a team as UCLA makes it look every year.

Other than the Aztecs, UCLA has as its non-conference opponents next season Tennessee and Michigan. In 1990, the Bruins host Oklahoma and travel to Michigan. UCLA will host BYU in the 1991 season opener before visiting Tennessee and San Diego State.

Overworked and underpaid: Think that your ASUCLA paycheck is kind of small this week?

Well, consider the case of Tim Harris.

Last year, Harris was a professional goalkeeper for the Minnesota Strikers, so when he signed up to help coach the UCLA soccer team, he was paid $1.00

The agreement, though, was that Harris was to donate the $1.00 back to the university.

At season's end, Harris got his check, which amounted to $.99 after taxes, yet when he went to cash it, his bank wouldn't accept it.

Calling it a stale check, the bank ultimately charged Harris $4.00, meaning that it cost him that $4.00 to coach UCLA last season.

Feeling any better now?

On the tube: On Thursday nights, a UCLA sports show on Prime Ticket will feature star volleyball players Ann Boyer and Daiva Tomkus—who will voice their opinions on UCLA's 11-0 start.

Speaking of Spikers: The women's volleyball team has now beaten all of last year's final four teams—Hawaii, Illinois, Stanford and Texas. They are 5-0 against the powerhouses.

The 11-0 start is the fourth best start by a Bruin volleyball team ever. The best start was in 1983 when they jumped off to a 20-0 record. The No. 1 ranking is the first time the Bruins have been in the top spot since the first two weeks of the 1985 season.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Volleyball player Ann Boyer will appear on Prime Ticket tonight.

More good news for the blue and gold squad. Freshman 6-4 middle blocker Rachel Norris, who was expected to start at the beginning of the season, is back at practice after missing the start of the season with a dislocated knee cap.

Ailing runner: Men's cross country runner Joe Nitti suffered a setback in his comeback bid at the Stanford Invitational.

Tendinitis kept him sidelined for the Bruin's first two meets and in his debut last Saturday, it was clear that he is behind in training. Nitti finished the 10,000 meters in 59th place (33:10), 2:15 behind winner Calvin Gaziano from Cal.

Nitti, a senior from Santa Monica who ran in all six varsity meets last year, will certainly bolster the Bruins' depth should he make a full recovery.

Like a fine wine: Do women cross country runners get better with age? For the answer keep your eye on Bruin senior Midge Artega. At 30, she may well be the oldest NCAA Division 1 athlete in competition.

Brown returns for CSUN

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

The UCLA women's cross country team travels to Cal State Northridge Saturday for a race that is generally regarded as low key.

To senior Nancy Brown, that's just fine with her.

After two achilles tendon operations in the last 16 months, Brown is eager to get back onto the course — any course — and the CSUN Matador Invitational comes at just the right time.

"I'm just glad it's not a big hyped meet," she admitted. "I'm nervous but it's not like it's nationals or something. It's probably the biggest test to see where I'm at in my racing."

This meet will get relatively little attention from cross country enthusiasts, as Brown said. But undoubtedly, head coach Bob Messina and Brown's teammates will be focused on every one of the 5,000 meters.

"For all the junk (Brown) has been through I hope she can do well," Messina said. "It's a situation where she hasn't competed for a while.

Busy Beavers prepare for Bruins

Wilhelm the key to suprising Oregon State

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

On Saturday, Erik Wilhelm and the surprising Oregon State Beavers—surprising only because they are traditional conference doormats—come to the Rose Bowl to face the powerful UCLA Bruins. For Wilhelm and his coach Dave Kragthorpe, the game is an imposing one—one that will show the Beavers how far they have come, or how far they have to go.

"UCLA is a great football team, " said Kragthorpe earlier this week. "I don't think they necessarily played a great game against Washington. They seemed to do what they had to do to win and that is the mark of a good team, and they certainly are a good team."

So far this season, Kragthorpe has orchestrated a veritable offensive blitzkrieg, averaging 413.4 yards per game, which is ahead of the record pace of OSU's 1962 team.

Much of that is due to Wilhelm, the slingin' southpaw quarterback who is ripping page after page from the Pac-10 record books. Wilhelm has moved to No. 2 behind John Elway on the conference's career passing list, with 7,821 yards. And he is fifth on the career total offense list behind such noted signal callers as Elway, Jim Plunkett, Jack Thompson ("the Throwin' Samoan") and John Paye.

Wilhelm will be looking to challenge Troy Aikman, a pretty good quarterback in his own right, into a little aerial dueling. In five games, Wilhelm has hit on 130 of 196 passes (.663) for 1,324 yards and nine touchdowns. Wilhelm has only one interception.

After an opening season 24-13 loss at home to Arizona, the Beavers hammered San Jose State and then scored 10 points in the last minute and a half to beat Cal 17-16. (In a humorous note that seems to typify Cal football, the officials accidentally tacked an extra minute on the game clock in the fourth quarter, enabling OSU to rally.)

The Beavers hung tough with a good Colorado team in Boulder, only succumbing 28-21 to the Buffaloes after a last minute Sal Aunese touchdown pass, and beat Fresno State last week 21-10.

But none of these teams match up, in terms of talent, with UCLA. Troy Aikman, who by most reports still leads the Heisman Trophy race, will surely test the Beaver cornerbacks, while Eric Ball and Shawn Wills will certainly go after the defense that yielded 278 yards a game on the ground last year. And defensively, the Bruins will look to shoot down Kragthorpe's "Air Express".

The keys to beat the Bruins? According to Kragthorpe, error free football will help.

"First of all, we must continue to play offensively the way we have been, and that is with

See OREGON STATE, Page 52

One thing's for sure, Frank Cornish needs no lessons in celebrating.

The salamander saga lives

Cornish celebrates, Tomkus on TV

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

UCLA women's cross country runner Debbie Williams made headlines after she was bitten by a creature that resembled a salamander at the Stanford Invitational last Saturday. She was taken to a local hospital and released soon after, much to the relief of head coach Bob Messina and Williams' teammates.

Now, more details of the bizarre incident have surfaced. It seems that Williams and fellow Bruin Pam Thompson encountered the raucous reptile after their 5,000-meter run.

Apparently, the creature had been injured, most likely kicked or stepped on, during the race. Williams and Thompson approached the ailing animal in hopes of returning it to its watery home.

According to Messina, Thompson was too "squeamish" to handle the lizard, so Williams went into action. The result was a finger that was reportedly gushing with blood.

After the finger swelled, Williams was taken to a local emergency room. Ice and a adhesive bandage were applied and the unlucky Bruin was released with a clean bill of health.

Even now, however, the exact identity of the reptilian creature is unknown. Since salamanders are not known for their viciousness, speculation points toward the bluebelly or alligator lizard species.

On the Beat: A UCLA Notebook

Up and coming: UCLA football coach Terry Donahue's blue-chip recruiting class of last spring—this fall's redshirt class (with the exception of tailback Shawn Wills, who is playing)—got a chance to shine at Wednesday's practice when the freshmen scrimmaged against one another.

In other words, a look at UCLA football—1990's style.

As expected, highly-touted quarterback Bret Johnson looked good, tossing two touchdown passes to rising young wide receiver Sean LaChapelle. Fullback Kaleaph Carter also looked impressive.

But to the veterans witnessing the practice, the freshmen still need a little seasoning—especially in the fine art of rejoicing.

After Johnson threw his practice-ending touchdown, the veterans gave them a little lesson—led by gregarious team leader and center Frank Cornish.

Said Cornish as he led the team into the end zone: "We gotta teach 'em how to celebrate."

Opening woes: Talk about a rough start.

Presidential debate to be held at UCLA

Pauley Pavilion selected for this week's face-off

Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

UCLA's Pauley Pavilion will be the site of the second debate between presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis next week. The site was chosen over locations at Pepperdine and USC.

The debate is scheduled for next Thursday or Friday at 6 p.m., depending on the American League baseball playoffs. The decision to hold the event at UCLA was announced late Friday afternoon by the Commission on Presidential Debates.

"Our attorneys are in the process of going through with UCLA and the city the extensive requirements that have to be met by the university," said Janet Brown, executive director of the commission.

"It's a big undertaking," to prepare the university for such an event, she said. "Access to the Pavilion must be provided, parking must be accounted for, and an area for a press filing system must be allocated."

The Commission will sponsor the event in lieu of the League of Women Voters, which last week rescinded its offer to sponsor the debate in Shrine Auditorium, Brown said.

"We don't know exactly why they withdrew," she commented.

On Friday afternoon, the League of Women Voters was unavailable for comment, but the Los Angeles Times reported Saturday that the group had demanded $90,000 for the right to use its reservation at the Shrine — a demand rejected in favor of UCLA.

"It'll be really tight for access to the debate," said Harlan Lebo of the UCLA Public Information Office. Tickets will not be on sale for the general public.

"There will be a limited number of people involved," Lebo said.

Brown explained that "this is a television event, not an audience event.

"Though Pauley Pavilion can hold many people, (the Pavilion has 12,543 seats)," she said, "but we can get into serious production problems. We only need a small stage, but audience noise can make things very difficult for the production crews.

"We have to keep the number of people who attend the debate rather small."

Those invited to the debates are generally people who have supplied funds and provided the debate site, she said.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Lane Vernardos, executive producer of special events for CBS News, said that most debate spectators will sit on 1,000 folding seats on the floor, while permanent seats will be used only by the media.

Brown told the Bruin that at Wake Forest University in North Carolina last month, special viewing rooms were set up with large-screen televisions where students could watch the debate free of charge.

WAC student fights for rights to project

By Thanh Nhan
Contributor

The cover of the UCLA World Arts and Cultures (WAC) student handbook reads, "The eye can see beyond any ocean." But in the case of senior Sallie Mackie, the solution seems to be nowhere in sight.

Mackie, who was supposed to graduate last summer, was denied her diploma. She also lost access to the services of the UCLA Placement and Career Planning Center because she withdrew her senior project from WAC's archive.

Attempts to settle the dispute and clear Mackie's record through the UCLA Ombudsman last spring were unsuccessful. Both sides have since sought legal assistance.

Initially given an "A" for the class in 1987, Mackie discovered last Wednesday that the grade was changed to DR. According to Alex Alas of the Registrar's office, a DR (Deferred Report) is given to a student when an instructor suspects a student of cheating.

"I called my degree auditor two days ago and they said, 'Yes you're in the graduation class of summer 1988'; today I'm not. I don't have credit for the class," said Mackie.

"It's ridiculous; it's absurd. I did the work, I turned it in. I deserve to graduate," she said.

According to Mackie, the project was placed in the UCLA WAC archive for one quarter. Mackie claims that her partner Jennifer Armstrong agreed to withdraw the project the following quarter.

Judy Mitoma, the professor who taught the class and who is currently the chair of WAC, said that Armstrong gave WAC permission to keep the project.

Avoiding burnout —in the 4th grade

'Children are being pushed too hard,' says researcher

By Maja Radevich
Staff Writer

"If you don't pace yourself, you'll burn out before you're 30."

A warning such as this conjures up visions of sweaty-browed junior executives in power ties groveling before their bosses in hopes of making it on the corporate team.

But few think of five and six year old children. For them this warning should be revised to read "If you don't pace yourself, you'll burn out before you're eight."

This updated version has recently been supported through research coordinated by UCLA Childcare Services indicating that children who are prematurely pushed to excel academically can burn out as early as the third or fourth grade.

Researchers sought to define optimal ages at which children are ready to learn specific academic skills. They concluded that academic learning is too high-pressured and structured in the pre-kindergarten, kindergarten and first grade years, said Carollee Howes.

Howes, associate professor in the UCLA Graduate School of Education, was co-chair of the School Readiness Task Force. The research group's findings were released after an extensive review of academic literature and the testimony of parents, teachers and administrators.

"Children these days are being pushed too hard and many of them simply get sick of school by the fourth grade" Howes said. "What's being taught now in kindergarten and first grade used to be taught in the second grade. This trend began in the early 1970s, which means that current undergraduates had a different curriculum than today's children have"

According to Howard Adelman, professor of psychology: "There is a tendency for schools to over-emphasize readiness skills, preparing the child for the next grade. This is not a happy trend."

He added that many child education programs narrowly focus on building academic skills at the expense of social and emotional skills and needs.

"When I was in school no one ever flunked kindergarten. These days too many children are failing," said June Sale, director of UCLA Childcare Services. "This just isn't right. Kindergarten should fit the needs of the child instead of the child fitting the needs of the school.

"The United States is the only industrialized country that pushes their children before they're ready. In Europe, children are not taught to read until they are 7 years old . . . (we shouldn't) pick the fruit before it's ripe."

According to Howes, "The pressure is too great for some children . . . If they are held back for a year they get an early sense of failure and the cycle continues.

"In an analysis of achievement tests of third graders, we found that children who were retained in kindergarten did not do as well as other children in third grade, even though they were a year older," she explained.

In addition to the damage caused by pushing children too early, the task force also found that highly-structured academic programs in early years may do more harm than good.

"We're not saying that school should be structureless, but instead, play should be structured so that it's meaningful," Sale said. "For example, math used to be taught by having children play with blocks. They could touch them and hold them and learn the concept of numbers. Now they are taking blocks out and replacing them with math

MEChA seeks unity, members at meeting

By Elizabeth Escobar
Contributor

"Action is what gets things done," said MEChA founding member Jose Ortiz Franco, addressing an audience of about 300 to 400 students at Thursday night's annual MEChA Orientation.

MEChA, which stands for Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan (Chicano Student Movement of Aztlan), is UCLA's Chicano/Latino special interest group.

Franco, who helped establish UCLA's MEChA chapter in 1969, was only one of the special guests invited to participate in the night's activities — all organized to recruit new members and create a sense of understanding and commitment to the problems affecting the Chicano/Latino community.

The event featured traditional dancing by the UCLA Baile Folklorico, pre-Colombian music by the group Yatiri and comedy by Latins Anonymous — a troupe that satirized Chicano stereotypes in the U.S.

Sister Rosa Marta Zarate, another of the guests invited, spoke of her role as a Chicana activist working in grass root organizations within the L.A. community. Her use of the Catholic Church as a means of addressing social, political, and economic injustices has threatened her position as a Catholic nun.

"The Chicano is a person that believes in his culture, but those values can be lost and we are here tonight to fight against losing those values — losing our destiny, our land, our history, our dignity.

"People out there, the grass roots community, the undocumented, the illegal aliens within our own land are waiting for everyone of us who have the opportunity to take action," she said.

Zarate spoke movingly about her first impressions of the United States as a young 20-year-old nun, "This country was so beautiful for me . . . until the day my eyes were opened; the day I saw the struggling, unpaid farm workers; the day I was

Computer virus hits ASUCLA

Vaccine offered for infected PCs, software

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

Up to 100 people who used a campus computer network to copy software may have infected their personal computers with a high-tech disease.

Employees of the ASUCLA Computer Store discovered a software "virus" in their Apple MacIntosh network last week — the store's first encounter with such a problem. Anyone who used the public-access network after Sept. 26 may have copied one of over 30 virus-infected computer programs.

The virus itself is tame by programmers' standards. It simply hogs computer memory by copying itself endlessly. At worst, it causes other programs to malfunction.

ASUCLA says it has a cure for the virus and will distribute it free. Starting this week, the Computer Store will hand out remedy programs for MacIntosh users who think they may have copied a virus from the network. In addition, the network will be removed from the sales floor, and all future access channeled through store employees. Customers can still get software from the system, but employees will do the copying for them.

"We want to do two things — put this virus in check and make sure we don't spread something like this again," said Tim Bayley, ASUCLA Students' Store director.

Computer "viruses" are programs modeled after their biological counterparts. They hide inside a software application and copy themselves into other programs at every opportunity.

When someone retrieves a program, the computer uses a set of instructions to search its memory for the file. If those orders are infected, every file it retrieves receives a copy of the virus. A virus may even take up residence on a disk, thereby surviving when the computer is off.

"It's a lot like a communicable disease," said Pieter Lechner, a senior analyst at the UCLA Microcomputer Information Center.

Like diseases, viruses range from harmless to malevolent. Some make computers beep or flash messages; the worst destroy data.

The virus in the computer store's network is of the "nVIR" strain. Although an nVIR multiplies slowly and does not affect data files — such as word-processed reports — it can eventually make applications like MacPaint or MacDraw useless.

None of the files on the computer store's network had been destroyed when Lechner examined them. He said the virus probably entered the system when an unsuspecting user copied programs to an infected disk, and the virus on that disk spread to the network hard drive. "I doubt very much that someone did this on purpose," he said.

Alerted by customer

A customer warned the store about its virus last month, after software he copied from the network malfunctioned. Employees consulted Apple Computer and the Microcomputer Information Center

Yugoslav republic in turmoil

Montenegro officials offer resignations following unrest

By Dusan Stojanovic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — The government in a Yugoslav republic offered to resign this weekend after police with clubs dispersed thousands of protesters demanding the removal of Communist leaders, the state-run news agency said.

At least 23 people were detained in the clash in Montenegro's capital of Titograd but most were later released, said the Tanjug news agency.

A source reported about 10 people were injured when police charged the crowd, the first use of police force reported in three months of spreading economic and ethnic protests.

In Belgrade, Yugoslavia's ruling Communist Party presidium held an emergency session to discuss the Titograd protest and measures to combat "the further deteriorating political, security and economic situation in the country."

Last week, 30,000 demonstrators forced the resignation of the entire leadership in Vojvodina, a northern Serbian province.

In Titograd, 280 miles southwest of Belgrade, more than 20,000 demonstrators crowded overnight into a square outside the Montenegrin parliament, demanding the resignation of local and national leaders.

"You betrayed us!" chanted the flag-waving crowd. "We want bread. Our children are hungry!"

The demonstrators tried several times to force their way into the Parliament building but were

Chile plans for 1989 elections, reform

By Kevin Noblet
Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile — Opposition plans to create a "grand coalition government" next year face a strong challenge from the left and from pro-government forces claiming a hidden victory in President Augusto Pinochet's defeat.

"It's going to be very, very hard," Arturo Valenzuela, director of Latin American studies at Georgetown University in Washington, said in an interview Saturday.

The coalition must realize that next year's open election "is not in the bag," said Valenzuela, a Chilean who came home to monitor last week's vote on Pinochet.

He said the coalition of 16 opposition parties from the center-right to Socialist left that campaigned for Pinochet's defeat must avoid overconfidence.

Pinochet lost by more than 800,000 votes in Wednesday's yes-or-no referendum on whether to extend his 15-year rule to 1997.

According to the 1980 constitution, he remains president for 16 more months. The winner of elections planned for December 1989 is to assume power in March 1990.

The opposition coalition's secretary-general, Genaro Arrigada, said he is not worried that the opposition will fall apart, despite the country's tradition for splitting into what Chileans call "the three thirds:" right, center and left. Most previous presidential elections had three major candidates, one from each camp.

Instead, he said the coalition plans to pursue "a grand coali-

Quayle says he is now GOP's 'lightning rod'

By Eileen Putman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Dan Quayle was supposed to show the country last week that he "has no horns," as one adviser said. Instead, the Republican vice presidential nominee remains the most controversial candidate on either party's ticket.

He admitted as much when he observed Friday that he had become "the lightning rod for the campaign."

Aides say Quayle's debate with Democratic rival Lloyd Bentsen, a confrontation many voters seem to think Quayle lost, has not affected the campaign strategy for the Indiana senator or his relationship with GOP nominee George Bush.

But some Bush aides have been quoted as saying privately that his debate performance was assessed as a negative. Bush himself rarely mentions Quayle during campaign appearances unless he is responding to reporters' questions.

Republican pollster Kevin Phillips, interviewed Sunday in NBC's "Meet the Press," there is no doubt that voters, including many Republicans, are "nervous" about Quayle.

Democratic pollster Peter Hart, interviewed on the same show, said comparisons of public and private polls before and after the debate show a nationwide switch of 2 or 3 percentage points in favor of the Democratic ticket.

During an impromptu news conference on his campaign plane late Friday, Quayle rejected suggestions that he is viewed as a liability by the Bush camp.

"I'd like to find out who did say that," he said. "I think I might have some influence on their job security."

As for Bush, "I don't know how he could have defended me any more vigorously," Quayle said.

"He thought the debate was outstanding. He called me right after the debate and he said 'home run — an absolute home run! And he believes that and still believes that . . . I don't know how he could be any more vigorous in his support."

'Restoration year' begins for KLA radio

By Susan C. Mills
Contributor

For many people, the abbreviation KLA has no obvious significance. But at UCLA, these letters can only mean one thing: an award-winning radio station.

Those who are unaware of KLA's presence on campus will soon be. This year, one of the student-run radio station's primary objectives is to increase its exposure.

"One of our goals is to make people aware of KLA, where they can get it, and what it offers," said ASUCLA Publications Director Terence Hsiao.

It is true that KLA, found on 53 AM in the residence halls and co-op, and 99.9 FM on Century Cable, has traveled a rocky road in the past. But this year, the 24-hour-a-day, progressive music station is looking for students with positive attitudes and ideas for creative advertising and broader programming in hopes of attracting more sponsors and a large devoted audience, said Matt Barrett, KLA's former general manager.

Barrett resigned from his post in September for financial reasons. Lisa Welch, KLA's previous operations manager, is acting as temporary general manager until the ASUCLA Communications Board decides who will assume the position permanently.

Throughout the recent uncertainty, the radio station has continued to run smoothly, although committed people are needed to Study abroad fair scheduled

Event to feature information, international foods

By Holly Bauer
Staff Writer

The UCLA Study Abroad and International Food Fair, to be held on Oct. 12, will feature presentations on work, study, and travel opportunities for students abroad, as well providing a chance to try international foods.

Twenty-two abroad programs from seven different countries, 16 American-based programs, and five campus groups will be represented in Dickson Plaza for the fair, according to International Programs Counselor Dario Bravo.

"This gives students a real opportunity to investigate some programs by talking to the people who actually put them together, especially the foreign programs," Bravo said.

The foreign programs provide "a unique opportunity to mix with foreign students," he said, adding that last year's fair created a "good feeling."

American-based programs scheduled to attend include the Peace Corps, the American Youth Hostel Federation, the Council on International Exchange, and the Westwood Village Rotary Club.

The foreign study programs represent England, Israel, the Netherlands, France, Switzerland, Mexico, and Australia, he said, adding that the American-based ones involve many more.

UCLA groups planning to attend are International Studies and Overseas programs, Education Abroad Program (EAP), the Center for Pacific Rim Studies, the UCLA Cambridge Program, and the UCLA Royal Arts Program. ASUCLA will have a booth as well, Bravo said.

About ten international student organizations will sell international foods, he added.

Over 2,000 students attended the first fair held last fall, Bravo said.

Measles outbreak a student concern

By Dr. Deborah Shlian
Student Health Services

Concern about the rise in measles cases in the Los Angeles area this summer has led Student Health Services to offer free measles vaccinations during the month of October.

Over the summer a measles outbreak resulted in more than 300 cases, concentrated in south Los Angeles, Santa Fe Springs and Cerritos.

While the outbreak resulted in two infant deaths, there were no fatalities among young adults or adolescents. But in past years there have been student deaths from measles outbreaks on various university campuses.

Young adults and adolescents who have not been immunized are not only more susceptible to infection when exposed, but are more likely to suffer serious complications such as pneumonia, encephalitis and even death.

"One third of this year's cases involved preschoolers under 16 months," said Paul Fredericks, epidemiologist for the L.A. County Health Department. "Many of these were considered non-preventable by the Health Department since immunization is

Senate to consider drug bill

By Susanne M. Schafer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, contending the American people have "had it" with drug users and pushers, this weekend exhorted the Senate to approve tough, House-passed anti-drug legislation before adjourning next week.

"Time is fast running out," Reagan said in his weekly radio address, delivered from his weekend retreat at Camp David, Md.

"I want all Americans to take heart. This war is not yet won, not by a long shot, but we are doing better and our nation is united against this scourge as never before," Reagan said.

The House has passed one version of the legislation, but the measure has not yet come before the full Senate.

"The House bill has many good and tough provisions that express our national commitment to five simple but powerful words — those words are 'zero tolerance' and 'Just say no,'" Reagan said, lifting the slogan from his wife Nancy's anti-drug education campaign.

"By zero tolerance, we mean simply, that we've had it," Reagan said. "We will no longer tolerate those who sell drugs and those who buy drugs.

"All Americans of good will are determined to stamp out those parasites who survive and even prosper by feeding off the energy and vitality and humanity of others. They must pay," he said.

Reagan pointed out that the bill passed by the House earlier this month on a 375-30 vote includes the death penalty for those who kill a law enforcement officer or authorizes the killing of anyone in a drug-related crime.

"We must, we need, and we will have this law," he said.

Reagan also put in a plug for Vice President George Bush, calling the GOP presidential candidate his "point man" on the administration's anti-drug fight.

Senators have been negotiating privately over crucial time-limiting agreements that would enable Congress to pass the anti-drug measure before adjournment, expected to come at the end of next week.

A bipartisan group of sponsors introduced the drug measure in the Senate on Monday. But they agreed the Senate will run out of time if long debates ensue over controversial issues such as user penalties and allowing the admission in federal court of evidence seized illegally, but in "good faith."

Cheers, jeers greet North appearance

The Associated Press

CUPERTINO, Calif. — Some 300 people turned out to jeer fired National Security Council aide Oliver North as he urged more than 1,000 Christian business leaders to fight the "alien and godless philosophy" of communism.

"I don't think (North) cares one way or another" about protesters, admitted rally organizer Mitch Diamond, outside an auditorium where North addressed members of the Christian Businessmen of Silicon Valley on this weekend.

Diamond jokingly added, "He knows we're all communists, ready to overthrow the country."

Some of the protesters dressed as a Moslem ayatollah and as President Reagan. Many carried signs denouncing North's clandestine efforts to sell weapons to Iran and secretly

Soviets to destroy Chernobyl

Still, hundreds defy orders to stay out

By Ann Imse
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The radiation-contaminated town of Chernobyl, near the site of the world's worst nuclear accident, is being razed because it will not be fit for human habitation for decades, Pravda said Saturday.

Officials even plan to erase the Chernobyl administrative region by eliminating Communist Party and government bodies in the area and transferring seven villages to a neighboring region, the newspaper reported.

"That will be the end to the Chernobyl "problem," Pravda noted in an article that objected to the plans.

Pravda complained that local authorities are taking drastic action without trying hard enough to clean up the 800-year-old town. It questioned why the decision was made without prior announcement and without consulting the people who wanted to go back to the area to live.

Chernobyl, once home to 10,000 people, was evacuated in April 1986 after a fire at the power plant with the same name spewed radiation worldwide. Officials said 31 people were killed.

Radiation levels in Chernobyl are so high that people cannot live their for decades, V. Komarov, chief engineer of the nuclear power plant, was quoted as saying.

Local authorities in the town, which is 11 miles from the plant, burned one house and then

Macintosh Users:
We're Fighting A Computer Virus

If you copied any software from us in the last three weeks, you may be the victim of a computer virus. We want to help you fight it.

On October 6, we discovered that the AppleShare Network in the ASUCLA Computer Store was infected with a virus since identified as "nVIR." Because we've always allowed the campus access to our network — in order to update system files, copy public domain software, and generally get the feel of using a Macintosh — we were vulnerable to this virus, and may unwittingly have helped to spread it.

Fortunately, nVIR is a "low-level" virus: it doesn't spread very quickly, and it's not among the more destructive viruses. An nVIR infection is no cause for panic — but if you determine you're at risk, please take precautions against it.

Potential Risk

The risk is highest if you copied an application or system file from us in the last one to two weeks — that is, between September 26 and October 6. If you have not yet used the disks you copied from us — don't. If you have, please come to the Computer Store as soon as possible to get a "vaccine" program. The vaccine program will run a diagnostic test; if your computer or network proves to be infected with nVIR, the vaccine can also help repair the damage. If you need assistance using the vaccine program, we'll help you. The first step is to come to the Computer Store.

In an effort to better track the virus, we'll be asking you what date you used our equipment, which files you copied, and which machines you've used since. Please be accurate to the best of your knowledge — even if you copied files you shouldn't have. We're only interested in containing the virus, and we need as much information as possible.

Evidence shows that we had the infection less than two weeks. This conclusion has been reviewed by UCLA's Microcomputer Information Center and they concur with our assessment. To be absolutely safe, you may wish to extend this "window" to three weeks — that is, to September 19. Please feel free to come to the Computer Store and get a vaccine program. Like the higher risk group, we'll ask you to supply as much information as you can.

No Risk

Commercial software purchased from us was not exposed to the virus. We do not demo software packages and re-sell them, nor do we re-seal packages that have been handled by customers. Exposure to the virus is limited to those individuals who copied files from us or asked us to update systems or application software.

Aftermath

Our first concern has been to notify our customers of the problem, and help them combat any virus we may have unknowingly helped to transmit. Our second concern is to prevent a recurrence of this incident. We intend to dedicate a single machine, not accessible to customers, to vendor-supplied software updates. We will not use this computer for public domain software or shareware; regrettably, we can no longer trust that non-commercial software is safe for us to distribute. We will also minimize customer access to our other machines. We regret the loss of our easy, open atmosphere, but we feel this incident leaves us few options.

$75 million measure to aid water systems

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series on the November ballot propositions. A story on Proposition 82 also appears in today's paper.

Propositions '88

Proposition 81:
Would authorize the state to sell $75 million more in bonds for the California Safe Drinking Program.
At least $45 million would be used for loans of up to $5 million per agency. As much as $25 million would be given out in grants up to $400,000 each. Priority would be given to facilities with the most critical public health problems.

SACRAMENTO — Proposition 81 would replenish a shrinking pool of money for local governments to build, improve or repair water systems and meet drinking water standards.

For the past 12 years, the state has issued voter-approved general obligation bonds to finance loans and grants to help local drinking water systems meet state health regulations.

All but $44 million of the $350 million authorized by previous bond acts will be spent or committed by November.

Proposition 81 would authorize the state to sell $75 million more in bonds for the California Safe Drinking Program.

At least $45 million would be used for loans of up to $5 million per agency. As much as $25 million would be given out in grants up to $400,000 each. Priority would be given to facilities with the most critical public health problems.

Another $6 million could be spent on studies to identify ways of improving local drinking water systems, while $5.2 million would be set aside for state administrative and legal costs.

The bonds would be paid off over a period of 35 years. An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would add about $125 million in interest costs. However, because the loans would be repaid, the state's net cost would be about $110 million, according to a nonpartisan legislative analysis.

About 2,000 water systems have applied for a total of $1 billion in state assistance, according to a ballot pamphlet argument signed by Assemblyman Bill Leonard, R-Redlands, and Jack O'Connell, D-Santa Barbara.

"While we will not fully solve California's drinking water problems with this bond law, it will help us meet our most immediate needs," they said. "The safety of our communities and the health of our children deserve no less."

But critics raise concerns about the state's growing reliance on bonds.

Proposition 81 is part of a record $3.3 billion package on the November ballot. In June, voters approved $2.2 billion in bonds for school, park, Cal-Vet home loans and earthquake rehabilitation.

"The politicians in Sacramento to support bond measures as a painless way of financing popular programs," says a ballot pamphlet argument against Proposition 81 signed by Jerry R. Douglas, a Las Virgenes Resource Conservation District director and two Libertarian congressional candidates.

"Buying a stereo or a refrigerator with a credit card is painless too — until the bill arrives. Taxpayers (and their children and grandchildren) will be stuck paying the bill for 20 years, a painful proposition indeed."

But supporters cite a recent legislative analysis that found California is well below other states' average on the amount of its budget spent on debt service.

Water conservation aim of bond measure

By Kathleen Grubb

Editor's note: This is the fifth in a series on the November ballot propositions. A story on Proposition 81 also appears in today's paper. Tomorrow: Proposition 83.

Proposition 82:
Would provide $60 million for low-interest loans for water conservation and groundwater recharge projects.

SACRAMENTO — Proponents of Proposition 82 say voter passage of the $60 million bond measure in November will mean water in storage tanks for future farming and domestic use.

Proposition 82 would restore funding for programs used to assist cities, counties and water districts repair leaky pipes, line irrigation canals, build underground storage tanks and develop new water supplies.

In 1960, voters passed a measure that authorized $130 million in general obligation bonds for new canals, dams, reservoirs and other water-delivery systems.

Since 1984, voters have approved another $85 million in bonds for projects to conserve water and refill groundwater supplies.

But those funds are drying up.

All of the money for developing new water delivery systems is expected to be spent before voters go to the polls Nov. 8.

And over 100 proposed water conservation projects totaling $215 million are competing for shares of a fund that the state Department of Water Resources predicts will dwindle to $77 million by November.

"Over half of these projects have $3 in benefits for every $1 in cost, making them a good investment for all Californians," said a ballot argument signed by Democratic Assemblymen Jim Costa of Fresno and Norman Waters of Plymouth and Sen. Henry

63-year-old teacher goes back to class

Teacher of the Year Flossie Lewis begins classes at UC Berkeley

By Leslie Goldberg
San Francisco Examiner

BERKELEY, Calif. — Flossie Lewis, 63, is dressed for back-to-school. Wearing a plaid skirt, sensible shoes and a well-worn backpack, she trudges through Sproul Plaza on the UC-Berkeley campus, past kids a third her age. A small silver bird dangles around her neck.

With wings unfurled, the glittering pendant is a symbol. Of what? Flossie Lewis, English teacher par excellence and named Teacher of the Year last year by the California Association for the Gifted, would never tell. "You have to discover the meaning for yourself," she would say.

Lewis has been getting students to probe deeper, work harder, see things in another way for over 30 years. She taught at Lincoln High School in San Francisco and, most recently, at Lowell High School. She calls herself a frustrated actor and she's not above climbing on top of her desk to dramatize a passage from a play or a poem. She does a mean James Cagney.

"You never fall asleep in her class or start thinking about what you have to do tomorrow," says former student Sandy Louey, now a freshman at Cal.

Lewis was recently tangled in a real-life drama with the San Francisco Unified School District. Because of a bureaucratic foul-up over Lewis' retirement benefits, the well-loved and respected teacher was nearly forced out of teaching. Superintendent of Schools Ramon Cortines intervened. Feathers were smoothed and Lewis will return for one more year of teaching after she completes doctorate courses in English at UC-Berkeley this year.

Resting on the steps in front of Sproul Hall, Lewis talks about education, kids and school. Former student Louey stands nearby, her arm around the older woman.

Another student, Lak Do, also comes up to greet his former teacher. "This is a nasty woman," says Do with a smile. "She keeps turning the screw and turning the screw until you can't breathe!"

Child receives heart after four-month wait

The Associated Press

LOMA LINDA, Calif. — A 5½-month-old boy who had waited four months for a new heart was in critical condition Sunday following heart-transplant surgery at Loma Linda University Medical Center, the hospital said.

Matthew Matsumiya, diagnosed with a general deterioration of the heart when he was 1 month old, spent the longest on the transplant waiting list of any other infant at Loma Linda, said spokeswoman Anita Rockwell.

The five-hour transplant surgery ended at noon Saturday, she said.

Matthew, of Orange, became the 21st infant to undergo human heart transplant surgery at the hospital. Of those, four have died.

His parents, Graham and Cheryl Matsumiya, both 25, also have a 17-month old boy named Jacob, said Ms. Rockwell.

Mello, D-Watsonville.

But critics question the fiscal wisdom of financing local capital projects with state-backed bonds.

Proposition 82 would authorize the state to issue $60 million in bonds for low-interest loans to local government agencies for water conservation programs and groundwater recharge facilities.

Up to $40 million would be dedicated to projects to conserve water, such as lining agricultural ditches and replacing leaky pipes. As much as $20 million could go for developing new water supplies and building canals, dams and reservoirs. The state's administrative and legal costs would be limited to $5.3 million.

An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would add $58 million to the state's potential bill. However, because the loans would be repaid, the nonpartisan legislative analyst estimates the state's net cost would be $24 million.

Opponents of Proposition 82 argue that ending water subsidies for farms would be a more effective means of stopping water waste.

"We admit that this measure is popular," Jerry R. Douglas, a Topanga-Las Virgenes Resource Conservation District director, and two Libertarian congressional candidates said in a ballot pamphlet argument against Proposition 82.

"But we also have to note that there are so many bond issues on this ballot that the whole concept is getting ridiculous. With each election, the number grows and grows until your ballot pamphlet looks like a phone book."

Supporters say bond financing is similar to a house mortgage. They say it's fair and reasonable for future generations who will benefit from bond-financed capital projects to share the costs.

Six miles up and sleepy: pilot fatigue

Researchers study conditions, consequences of flying while tired

By Fred Bayles and Daniel Q. Haney
Associated Press

Airline pilots, weary from flying many hours across multiple time zones, often wander out of assigned air space, land on wrong runways and even fall asleep at the controls of planes carrying hundreds of passengers.

A review of sleep research and interviews with researchers and pilots by the Associated Press found the significance of fatigue, long a problem in air travel, has grown along with the deregulated airline industry.

Government documents obtained by the AP describe some 600 incidents over the last five years, an average of two a week, in which air crews blamed fatigue for potentially dangerous mistakes in navigation, communications and piloting.

While never officially listed as a cause in any U.S. commercial aviation accident, fatigue has been linked to several incidents. A still unreleased report by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board cites fatigue as a factor in the Dec. 12, 1985, crash in Gander, Newfoundland, of a charter plane carrying 248 U.S. servicemen and a crew of eight.

Many people interviewed blame airline deregulation for the mounting reports of fatigue. Deregulation brought a competitive explosion in air travel, and pilots contend their airlines try to lower costs by working them harder, sometimes with schedules that keep them flying all night and into the next day.

These work hours, say the pilots, affect their concentration.

"When you're fatigued, you get distracted easily," said Dave Linsley, a United captain and a pilot's union spokesman from New Jersey. "Then you get into physical problems, hitting the wrong switch, over-controlling the aircraft, sometimes turning the wrong way or busting an altitude.

"It comes down to both of you sitting at the controls and shaking your heads to stay on top of things."

Linsley was among two dozen pilots interviewed by the AP. Many talked of falling asleep in the cockpit.

"I've flown trips that weren't safe because we were all so exhausted," said a Northwest Airlines captain, who asked not to be identified. "I've flown trips that leave at midnight with three legs (takeoffs and landings) and you arrive at noon, feeling like a piece of dog meat."

Pilots aren't alone in their concern. Researchers such as NASA psychologist R. Curtis Graeber believe pilots often fly beyond their endurance.

"I am convinced that serious errors occur that are facilitated by fatigue, sleep loss, jet lag, whatever you want to call it," said Graeber, lead scientist at the Aviation Systems Research Branch of the NASA-Ames Research Center south of San Francisco.

In the last two decades, many experiments on volunteers have documented the effects of thinking while short of sleep or out of synchronism with the body's built-in clock, the circadian system.

This research underscores the belief that fatigue is risky for pilots, but proving it in the cockpit is difficult. No blood test can measure sleepiness after a crash or near miss. Even if one could, a crash almost always results from a series of mistakes and bad luck; fatigue may be only one link in the chain of disaster. So sleep experts have begun flying with pilots to see what really goes on.

"I've been all over the world with these guys. I know what happens," said Graeber. "We've seen fuel mismanagement, two engines being flamed out and nobody could figure out why for 20 minutes. We've seen tires blown."

These problems occur, in part, because jet travel ignores the circadian timekeeper, the product of millions of years of evolution on a planet rotating once each 24 hours. Each day, the clock oversees changes in body temperature, alertness and hormonal secretions, all geared to roughly a 24-hour cycle.

For most people, the daily swing reaches its low point from 3:30 to 5 a.m. This is when they are sleepiest. There is another, less pronounced, valley of drowsiness in the afternoon from 4 to 5. The body temperature is also lowest at these times.

Consider the pilot who leaves California on a late-night, cross-country flight. Even if he slept during the day, he's likely to feel sleepy early in the morning as his body temperature falls. By the time he checks into a New York hotel, his body temperature is rising again — his body clock is telling him to wake up. Even though he is tired, sleep is difficult. He awakes feeling ragged and has to fly again.

While U.S. airlines have the world's best safety record, Graeber and others worry that pilots' schedules do not consider the grinding, numbing effects that 15-hour days, abrupt shift changes or multiple time zone travel can have.

The pilots agree.

"Sometimes, if you've flown several legs and had a rough day with bad weather, you realize you're not seeing things you're supposed to see," said an Eastern captain who asked not to be identified. "I've flown at 2 in the morning when I realize I've fallen into a hypnotic state. I've been on airplanes where I don't remember the last three legs from the night before."

Fatigue contributed to at least two recent air accidents:

■ The Newfoundland crash of the Arrow Air DC-8, taking off for Fort Campbell, Ky. The preliminary report, as yet unreleased and subject to modification, blames icing and crew fatigue, noting the crew flew an exhausting schedule in the previous 12 days, including short layovers, multiple time zones and excessive flight hours.

■ The Feb. 19, 1985, "in-flight upset" of a China Airlines 747 flying from Taipei to Los Angeles. National Transportation Safety Board investigators said that after a simple engine flameout, the crew relied too long on autopilot to adjust the plane's bearing. When the captain finally took over, the 220-ton aircraft rolled over into a six-mile nosedive before control was regained 9,500 feet above the Pacific. The plane was extensively damaged and two people were seriously injured.

PILOTS: Safety in the air

The NTSB noted that five days before the accident, the captain had flown through five time zones on a return from Saudi Arabia and then had flown several flights between Taiwan and Japan. While the report stopped short of blaming fatigue, board member John Lauber, a sleep scientist, believes it was a factor.

"You go through that whole sequence and it's strongly suggestive of a crew that weren't plugged in and who probably weren't plugged in because of sleepiness," he said.

Fatigue may have been involved in other accidents as well, including the Sept. 25, 1978, collision between a Pacific Southwest 727 and a private plane and the Oct. 31, 1979, crash of a Western Airlines DC-10 in Mexico City.

On the night before the PSA accident, which killed 146 people, the crew had barely seven hours off duty and likely slept no more than 5½ hours. The next day, the pilot was heard saying on the cockpit tape, "I'm draggin'. It was a short night."

The Western crash occurred at 5:30 a.m. when the DC-10, having flown about three hours from Los Angeles, landed on the wrong runway and hit a truck. Seventy-three people died.

Both accidents were blamed on pilot error. Experts say hard evidence rarely exists to show pilots erred because they were tired.

"The problem with fatigue is it's not a bent piece of metal. It's not a liquid that can be analyzed in the laboratory," said Dr. Stanley Mohler, a former FAA official who heads aerospace medicine at Wright State University.

Government and airline officials acknowledge they've heard tales of pilots napping in flight and of mistakes attributed to sleepiness, but they play down such reports.

"There isn't evidence that there is a fatigue problem," said Walt Coleman, spokesman for the Air Transport Association, a trade group representing the major airlines.

T. Allan McArtor, administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration, says more research is needed into the effects of long flights on the circadian system, or biological clock. But he denies a safety problem.

"There's no evidence that shows it makes flying any more hazardous," McArtor said.

Some 600 accounts of missed approaches, near misses and near tragedies blamed on fatigue show up in voluntary pilot reports filed with the Air Safety Reporting System, an office run by NASA for pilots who want to confess to mistakes and report risky conditions without fear of retribution.

"What we have perceived out of this information is that fatigue is a real issue that needs to be addressed," said Bill Reynard, who runs the reporting system.

The reports provide a litany of horror stories:

■ In February 1987, the co-pilot of a cross-country jumbo jet already descending into Boston looks up from his coffee cup to see the captain asleep at the controls.

"I think we need to look at the world of the pilot and see what more hours and labor unrest is doing," he writes.

■ The next month a large airliner from Los Angeles to Baltimore sinks 4,000 feet below its assigned altitude, coming close enough to another plane to set off alarms at the air traffic control center.

"I do not believe it would have occurred to a rested crew," writes a crewmember, noting he flew all night to Cleveland then continued to Baltimore into the morning sun. "Duty regulations . . . do not in any way address the debilitating effects of flying all night and especially of continuing to work into the morning hours."

■ Last November the copilot of another large jet begins a takeoff roll from Fort Lauderdale without setting the flaps, an error then already suspected in the Northwest DC-9 crash in Detroit that had killed 154 people three months earlier.

Cockpit warning horns sound and takeoff is aborted. In the Detroit crash, the horns failed to sound.

"It is quite sobering to consider that the combination of fatigue and distractions could so easily cause a breakdown in my own cockpit discipline," writes the copilot, who had flown for three days with little sleep.

That incident affords a good look at the shadowy effects of fatigue. Planes don't crash because pilots are tired, say the experts. Fatigue becomes a killer only when something else — equipment or the weather — goes wrong as well.

If, for example, the Fort Lauderdale flight's warning horns had failed, as they did in Detroit, the tired pilot's oversight could have been fatal. In the Detroit crash, there was no evidence fatigue played a role.

On paper, FAA flight rules seem favorable to pilots. Domestic pilots are limited to eight hours' flight time a day; overseas pilots fly no more than 12. All pilots must rest at least eight hours between flight sequences.

However, the regulations count only scheduled flight time, not the hours spent on the ground between flights. Scheduled turnarounds and unscheduled delays can push a crew's day up to 16 hours.

Scheduling agreements between airlines and pilots once kept flight hours well below federal standards, but concessions to management have become commonplace amid the fierce competition brought on by deregulation.

John Mazor, spokesman for the Airline Pilots Association, said that 10 years ago, at the start of deregulation, the typical contract limited flight time to a maximum of 75 to 80 hours per month. Today, he says, it's 80-85 hours.

Several possible solutions to the fatigue problem are being considered: cockpits that monitor their operators, drugs that help flight crews sleep when off duty, schedules that figure in the time of departure and the direction of travel as well as the length of the work day.

One of the easiest and simplest solutions is the nap, but under FAA rules, napping is considered careless and reckless operation of the aircraft.

Yet on the long mid-flight stretches across continents and oceans, in planes so automated that they quite literally fly themselves, pilots have little to do but monitor their dials.

Graeber proposes that naps be carefully scheduled so each member of the flight crew anticipates a rest period.

Despite warnings from officials, public supporting AIDS initiatives, says poll

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Despite warnings about the astronomical costs and the probable negative effects on medical research, a new polls shows California voters continue to support two controversial AIDS-testing initiatives.

Both Proposition 102, which requires doctors to report the names of people testing positive for HIV, and Proposition 96, which permits law authorities to order testing in certain cases of those suspected of carrying virus, are favored by comfortable margins.

Current law prohibits most involuntary AIDS testing and requires that test results be kept confidential.

Appealing to the electorate's strong bent for law-and-order, Proposition 96 retained its 2-1 ratio of support, 42 percent in favor and 24 percent opposed. Thirty-four percent of voters are undecided.

Proposition 102 is favored by 36 percent to 27 percent opposed and 37 percent undecided.

A poll released Saturday, was conducted among 600 California voters statewide from Thursday through Saturday and has a margin of error of about 4 percent.

The poll results give a slight indication that the large number of undecided voters so far are moving against the initiatives, both on November's ballot. The movement in both cases was undecisive.

Two weeks ago, 46 percent supported Proposition 96, compared to 42 percent this time. The number of undecided this time rose seven points, mostly from the ranks of supporters.

The same poll showed 47 percent favored Proposition 102, compared to 36 percent this time. The number of undecided on the measure rose from 26 percent to 37 percent this time, while those opposed grew 1 percent.

Teichner said the reduced support for Proposition 102 can be attributed to growing movement of those opposed to the measure. Kitty Dukakis, wife of Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis, two weeks ago urged state voters to defeat the initiative.

Researchers Robert M. Anderson and John Quigley, economics professors at UC-Berkeley, said the measure will cost state and local governments $1.75 billion in the first year of implementation and the state would lose $2.65 billion in lost economic output.

"Proposition 102 would expend enormous sums of public funds on programs that are assigned very low priority by public health experts," their report concluded.

Proposition 96 is sponsored by Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block and GOP state Sen. Ed Davis, Los Angeles' ex-police chief.

Block says he designed the initiative to help protect victims of sex crimes and also law enforcement officials who fear they may have been exposed to AIDS or other communicable diseases.

If approved, crime victims and public safety officers could request mandatory AIDS testing of individuals charged with certain crimes or involved in an assault on police, firefighters or emergency medical personnel.

Opponents, including the sheriff of San Francisco and the president of the Health Officers' Association of California, fear that confidentiality will be lost and that inmates exposed to AIDS may be mistreated if all employees are informed of test results. Moreover, they point out that the proposition could cost up to $1 million a year to implement, according to the legislative analyst.

Students correlate college costs with quality, says poll

By Lee Mitgang
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fewer than six out of 10 young people say they have saved for college, and nearly 50 percent said tuition costs prevent many from seeking a higher education, according to a poll released Sunday.

In addition, more than one out of three teen-agers and young adults questioned in a survey commissioned by the Council for Advancement and Support of Education believe the most expensive colleges offer the best education.

The poll, aimed at measuring student awareness of college issues, was based on telephone interviews of 1,001 people age 13 to 21 from Aug. 24 to Sept. 7. It was released as part of National Higher Education Week, which began Sunday. The poll, conducted by the Gallup Organization, had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Thirty-eight percent agreed that "the higher the tuition costs of a college, the better the quality of education a student will receive." Among pre-college-age students, the figures were higher: 53 percent of 13- to 15-year-olds agreed with the statement; 41 percent of 16- and 17-year-olds surveyed did. But only 27 percent of current college students and graduates felt that way.

Asked what they thought was the major reason more students do not go to college, 48 percent said they thought the reason was that college is too expensive and they can't afford it. Fifty-nine percent of high school juniors and seniors polled said they or someone in their families had saved for their college education. The rest said they hadn't saved or they didn't know.

Asked what they'd do if they couldn't afford the college they wanted, 37 percent said they'd try to get loans, 32 percent would look for part-time jobs, 14 percent said they would select another college, and 2 percent said they would not attend college at all. The rest weren't sure.

Other findings:

■ 54 percent of America's high school juniors and seniors said they expect to graduate from college; 8 percent plan to graduate from high school but go no further. The remainder said they plan to attend vocational or trade school, or go to college but not long enough to graduate.

■ 67 percent said that in selecting a college, availability of particular courses and curriculum was "extremely important"; 44 percent cited the school's academic reputation; 45 percent said expense was a crucial factor.

■ Seven out of 10 believe public colleges offer as good an education as private schools, and three out of five felt two-year institutions are on a par with four-year schools.

Night Editors

tion government" after pressing for constitutional changes to speed the election and Pinochet's departure from power.

Pinochet, 72, who seized power in a 1973 coup, has vowed to remain in office until his term runs out. The powerful army he commands has shown no willingness to bargain with politicians.

Patricio Aylwin, president of the centrist Christian Democratic Party, and Ricardo Lagos, a prominent moderate Socialist, recognize that any negotiations with the military could take time.

"The people are mature enough to understand that 15 years of dictatorship don't end in 15 hours," Lagos said. "If we remain united, Pinochet can do nothing. That's the only important thing right now."

Most observers believe the consensus candidate will be Aylwin, a 67-year-old law professor and veteran politician generally considered acceptable to both the moderate right and left.

But leaders of the radical United Left alliance on Saturday called for Pinochet's immediate resignation and were expected to disregard moderates' appeals for patience.

Since Wednesday's referendum, Lagos, 52, has been barraged by supporters asking if he will run as the candidate of the left. On Friday, he declared: "I'm not a candidate. I'm not the most appropriate person."

The government and rightist groups are clearly hoping for an opposition split that could win them the election. Experts disagree over whether the constitution allows Pinochet himself to be a candidate, but his interior minister, Sergio Fernandez, said the loss Wednesday actually represented a kind of political victory.

Slightly more than 3.1 million people cast "yes" ballots Wednesday, compared to more than 3.8 million "no" votes.

Fernandez said the "no" votes "have to be divided by 16," the number of parties in the opposition coalition, while Pinochet alone can claim the "yes" votes.

bulldozed two streets of homes in the central district, the Communist Party newspaper said. Some of the buildings were just three years old. At first, authorities planned to tear down only dilapidated houses, Komarov wrote in a power plant newspaper quoted by Pravda.

But "by the time normal life can return, all the houses will be equally dilapidated and living in them will be impossible," he was quoted as saying. "There will be scarcely anything to preserve at all!"

Pravda noted that the town of Gden is about the same distance from the power plant as Chernobyl and has been decontaminated and repopulated.

In the revitalized Byelorussian town, new water lines were set down, streets repaved, roofs were replaced, and all 245 families returned six months after the accident, Pravda said.

"There is not a single such example in the Ukrainian part of the danger zone," even though the wind brought more radioactivity to Byelorussia than to the Ukraine after the accident, the newspaper said.

stopped by police and riot squads.

At 7 a.m., the police charged with clubs, pushing the protesters into a nearby park, witnesses said.

Montenegro's government later offered its resignation to its Parliament in Titograd, the republic's capital. It was not known when Parliament would consider the move.

Several Titograd officials, including the mayor, council members and party leaders, stepped down earlier Saturday.

The republic's Communist Party leadership met in an emergency session.

The Titograd rally was prompted by a strike of about 1,000 construction workers Friday for higher wages and living standards.

A police official, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that police intervened because of "nationalistic, vulgar and hostile speeches" delivered by several people during the overnight meeting.

Marko Orlandic, a Montenegrin representative in the national party presidium, told the crowd he would help workers, "but if you want a different (political) system, you have to do this without me." The speech was televised nationally.

The presidium, in its statement, blamed militant Serbian nationalists for the clash, giving full support to the local Communist leadership and its policies.

The presidium also called for action against "abuses of rallies and protest meetings" by protesters who advocate anti-Communist and nationalist demands.

Thousands of Serbs have rallied almost daily for three months in support of the republic's Communist boss Slobodan Milosevic and his efforts to reassert control over Serbia's two autonomous provinces, Kosovo and Vojvodina.

Milosevic also is popular in Montenegro, where most of the republic's leaders fear the Serbian domination drive is jeopardizing the autonomy of that republic.

The crowd in Titograd also demanded the ouster of Premier Branko Mikulic, who they claimed is responsible for the deep economic crisis, including 217 percent inflation, a $21 billion foreign debt and a 15 percent unemployment rate.

funnel profits to U.S.-backed Contra rebels battling the Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

Mary Ellen Furia of nearby Los Gatos and Ethel and Jack Ballad of Saratoga showed up with signs in support of North, who faces trial next year on 16 federal counts of attempting to defraud the government.

"Ollie North is our man. What Congress won't do, Ollie can," read their signs.

"We knew there would be protests against him, and we wanted to show we're behind him," said Furia.

North spoke for 50 minutes, after a 100-member church choir entertained the audience with religious and patriotic songs.

Quayle

Some GOP officials have seen Quayle, 41, as a liability almost from the moment he was selected by Bush at the party convention in New Orleans in mid-August.

Intense media focus on his military service, academic record and personal life, combined with his youth and his tendency to misspeak, created the image of a lightweight candidate, especially when compared with the patrician, 67-year-old Bentsen.

Bush campaign chairman James A. Baker III, said before the Oct. 5 debate in Omaha, Neb., that Quayle would have to show millions of television viewers that he "has no horns" and was "steady, serious and substantive."

Quayle generally performed well, although he seemed stumbling and hesitant when asked repeatedly what he would do if he had to assume the presidency.

Democrats immediately capitalized on that with two TV ads, one depicting Bush advisers regretting the choice of Quayle and another conjuring up the specter of a Quayle presidency.

Quayle responded by telling reporters that his new campaign role was to take the heat for Bush and that in any event, the voters ultimately choose between Bush and Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis, not their running mates.

Quayle insisted that he — not Bush's campaign strategists — had assigned him the role of lightning rod.

"I'm going to take all the heat and that's just fine. We'll let George Bush have a free ride," he said.

Asked why Bush was not the one to respond to the ads, Quayle replied, "They're attacking me."

Whether the debate will prove to be any sort of campaign watershed remains to be seen. Aides say their strategy remains the same.

Quayle will continue to campaign in the party's traditional base as well as key swing states such as Michigan and Ohio, which he will visit this week. He will continue to raise money for the ticket, court local and regional media coverage and make Dukakis his primary target for attack.

If anything, aides say, Quayle's campaign schedule will get busier between now and Nov. 8.

"This guy is going to be playing a major role in helping this ticket get elected," said David Prosperi, Quayle's spokesman. "This is the big run for the finish line."

KAPLAN QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Directions: For the following question, select the best answer choice provided.

1. Only if we know human nature can we know the nature of the true good for human beings. And only if we know the nature of the true good for human beings can we arrive at an idea of the truly just society. Thus, if we know human nature and the nature of the good for human beings, we can arrive at an idea of the truly just society.

Which of the following points out a potential flaw in the reasoning above?

(A) What one human being thinks is good might well be something that another human being thinks is not good.
(B) Many people have arrived at ideas of the just society, and all of them have been slightly different.
(C) It is quite possible to know human nature without in any way being able to know what is the good for human beings.
(D) Philosophers have argued for centuries over what specifically defines human nature, without coming to a general agreement.
(E) Arriving at an idea of the just society may require more than knowledge of human nature and knowledge of the good for human beings.

Mackie

Armstrong, who was in the process of moving to San Diego at the time, said that she allowed Mackie to make the decision. "It was basically her decision," said Armstrong. Unlike Mackie, Armstrong was allowed to graduate with her class.

Mackie entered the major in January of 1985. In 1987, Mackie took World Arts and Cultures 190A and 190B. The class, also known as Senior Colloquium, is required for graduation.

The culmination of the colloquium was a required project on a subject in the field of art/culture of the student's choice. Mackie and Armstrong submitted "Tradition in Transit: Contemporary Quilts and Their Makers." The original project, which consisted of one volume of text and another of volume of approximately 150-200 slides earned an A.

Mackie claims that she was not told nor presented with a written policy that required students to relinquish their projects to WAC.

Mitoma referred to the student handbook, stating that the policy was presented to students in advance. The student handbook states, "Student projects from 1985 onward are maintained in the archives . . ." However Mackie claims, "It was just a stated direction, not a provision."

1986 WAC graduate, David Tseklenis agreed that there was no statement that relinquishing projects to WAC was mandatory. "I don't recall there being a mandate," he said.

Mackie further claims that the student manual was not given to her upon entrance to the program and additionally that it was printed after her project was submitted.

Mitoma said that she was advised by UCLA legal counsel to decline further comment on the matter. UCLA attorney Patricia Jasper also declined to comment.

Last Spring, Mackie was contacted by UCLA Ombudsman Dan Hartsock. According to Mackie, Hartsock said that there were funds available with which a copy of the project's slides could be made (but not the text, since Armstrong had already made a copy available to the archive). But when Mackie quoted the price, Hartsock said there were not enough funds to cover the cost.

According to Mackie, the project cost over $500 in traveling expenses, quilt show tickets, camera equipment and computer rental.

WAC is an interdepartmental program which is part of both the College of Letters & Science and the College of Fine Arts. It is only 15 years old and the archive currently contains approximately 60 Senior Colloquium projects.

According to the UCLA Policy manual which governs all departments and programs, departments may keep creative work done by students if a prior agreement had been made.

"Faculty members who wish to use student submittals for future purposes, such as publication, should announce this to students in advance. The announcement may appear in the course description, in a class handout, or be made orally in an early class meeting. The announcement may spell out any future use intended, or may take the form of a simple statement: 'materials submitted in this class will not be returned.' A department may publish a uniform policy of this nature, or these announcements may be made by individual faculty members."

Measles

usually not recommended before 15 months of age.

"As a result, starting in July, we changed our recommendations to age 12 months. Before that time the effects of maternal antibodies may neutralize the vaccine's effectiveness," he explained.

"The sad news is that an effective vaccine for measles has been available since the 1960s. If all susceptible individuals were immunized in childhood, measles would be an obsolete disease today like smallpox," he said.

Those who were immunized after 1968 probably received the live vaccine that offers the best protection, while those immunized before this time need to receive the new vaccine. Since measles was prevalent up to 1957, anyone born prior to that date is presumed to have been exposed to the disease and should have natural immunity.

Because of the continuing concern on our campus, the Student Health Service has responded by beginning a free vaccination program during the month of October. Anyone interested may come to the SHS Immune Clinic between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. After October the vaccine can be obtained at its usual cost of $13.

Mackie

ment may publish a uniform policy of this nature, or these announcements may be made by individual faculty members."

Mackie contends that it is illegal for the school to keep her project because she did not sign a contract relinquishing her project to WAC.

According to Mackie, Ombudsman Hartsock initially took her side, agreeing that it was illegal for the school to penalize her for withdrawing her project. However, Hartsock changed his mind and sided with the university after speaking with Mitoma, she said. Hartsock declined to comment on the case, citing professional confidentiality.

Armstrong said that she does not recall signing a contract either. "We weren't warned of possible repercussions. It was just a given . . . I understood it as standard policy . . . I understood it to be a contribution to the program."

The archive is kept for several purposes. Mitoma explained that students in the future could look back and view the art and culture of our times that is captured in the archives.

Tseklenis whose project, "Community Revitalization: Art in the Street," includes over 500 slides said, "I didn't think twice about it, I thought it would be more useful in the archive for other students and research." He added that his project used primary sources and that these could be used by future students who wished to build on his research.

Despite the recent retraction of her grade in Senior Colloquium and her questionable status with the university, Mackie remains optimistic: "I am being intimidated and forced. Why should I give in?"

work in production, promotions, and operations, areas that provide excellent hands-on experience, said Welch.

"It's a business laboratory basically," said Barrett. "It needs more business-oriented people, not music-oriented people."

However, there still are a few positions open in KLA's music department, which is expanding to include an assortment of new sounds.

"To some degree, we have to maintain ourselves as an alternative, post-modern station. But we also recognize that UCLA is a very diverse community and we have to meet the needs of all those people. So we have a really good, varied programming schedule. There will be jazz shows, classical shows, funk, ska, and metal," said Welch.

KLA promises to have an exciting year compared to last year. Despite receiving several awards from the California Intercollegiate Press Association, including first place for the best news and sports stories, the station was overwhelmed with complications, Barrett said.

"Some were technical problems; some were managerial problems," said Hsiao. Equipment was not regularly maintained and people were confused as to what their positions entailed, he said.

"This is a restoration year," said Barrett, who began by making difficult staff decisions and ordering residence hall transmitters repaired.

And the restoration continues as KLA's budget now allows for regular equipment maintenance; Barrett said. In addition, orientation meetings were held last week which attracted approximately 150 people.

"We have all the tools to do really well. We just need the planning and the people who are willing to do it," said Barrett.

"But there are still lots of opportunities to get involved in KLA," Welch said. Applications for general manager will be accepted until Oct. 14. For more information, call KLA at 825-9104.

The discovery prompted ASUCLA's virus warning in today's Daily Bruin. The advertisement asks customers who want vaccine software to provide employees with information, including:

- When they used the store's computer network
- Which files they copied
- The location of other potentially infected computers.

Do you have an eye for detail? Do you have good grammar and spelling skills? Do you have a talent for writing headlines?

The Daily Bruin is interested in copyeditors for the 1988-89 year. Copyeditors are needed to proofread and write headlines for stories in the news, viewpoint, entertainment and sports sections.

worksheets which are a rote method of learning."

Patricia Greenfield, professor of psychology and chairman of developmental psychology, agrees that a hands-on approach is more appropriate for teaching children.

"What educators need to remember is that serious subjects can be taught through the 'learn by doing' method," she said. "As a matter of fact, feeling, seeing, and hearing can help everyone learn, including college students. The senses make the abstract more meaningful."

Sale added that in earlier years, teachers read to their students, while now they teach them the alphabet and the sounds of each letter.

"Teachers used to read to the kids and show them that there's a whole big, wonderful world in books out there," Sale said. "Kids wanted to learn to read. Now they have to learn one word at a time, letter by letter."

What do kids learn this way? They learn that school is no fun, that learning is drudgery."

called a cheap, dirty nun by a priest in my own Church.

"This country became for me the land of lies; the country of blindness; the country of disappointment," she continued.

Zarate, who has earned four bachelor's degrees and has visited all of Latin America, concluded by challenging the members of the Chicano/Latino community to join her in her fight for justice. She received a standing ovation.

"I think the orientation was a success in terms of seeing a lot of new faces. There were many freshmen, undergraduates and graduates from the whole campus," said Lupe Duran, administrative coordinator for MEChA.

Although Duran did not know the exact number of new members who signed up for MEChA, she expressed her satisfaction of the outcome that night.

"We want to create a family-type atmosphere and a community of concerned individuals," said Duran about MEChA's goal for the future.

Duran also expressed her concerns about the apathetic nature of uninvolved students and community members.

Support groups and various other programs not directly affiliated with MEChA are made available to Chicano/Latino students, Duran said, to try to combat this apathy.

"We strive for leadership and education within our Chicano community and we want students to play a bigger role in it," said Duran.

The event took place in Moore 100 and was funded by the Community Program Committee.

Women work out of economic necessity and for self-fulfillment

By Laureen Lazarovici

When Professor William Allen asks the question, "What is responsible for the spectacular increase in the number of women workers?" (Bruin, Registration Issue) he asks an important question but bases his analysis on several (unexpressed) assumptions that lead him to utterly innate conclusions.

First, he assumes that women who do not work outside their homes do not work. All women work, whether it is in their own homes caring for their own children and households or caring for other people's children or in an office or a factory. If economists were to quantify the services a homemaker provides her own family (cooking, cleaning, chauffeuring, etc. Karl Marx would add prostitution to the list), they would find that the value of these services would be worth several thousand dollars a year. Just because a homemaker does not get a paycheck at the end of the week does not mean she does not do valuable work. Since this work is necessary for the efficient running of a household, a homemaker's work is, in Allen's terms, an economic necessity.

Second, Allen's emphasis on married women ignores a crucial segment of society that is in desperate need of finding adequate child care services: single mothers. With about 50 percent of all marriages ending in divorce, no woman can afford the luxury of not having any marketable skills. Study after study has found that after a divorce, the man will enjoy an increased standard of living while the woman (and the children she is usually given custody of) will face a marked decrease. Since women must work to develop the skills that at least 50 percent of them will need to save themselves and their children from destitution, women's work is an economic necessity.

Finally, Prof. Allen ignores the fundamental right of all human beings (regardless of gender) to pursue self-fulfillment. Working at one's chosen profession — homemaker, teacher, scientist, corporate tycoon — is part of pursuing that self-fulfillment. Prof. Allen's analysis indicates to me that he does not embrace this right of self-fulfillment for all people, which transcends the question of "economic necessity" and addresses the more crucial question of human rights.

The obstacles one must overcome to receive a permission-to-enroll slip

By Michael Buff

The ringing in my head shocked me into existence the other day.

I opened my eyes and stared at the evil thing making that hideous sound. My alarm clock. It was 7:54 a.m. I had a class at, of course, 8 a.m.

I ran down my building's stairs while still trying to put on my shirt. Forgot my shoes. But I have my books, a small pencil, and the back of my syllabus to take notes on.

I ran all the way to campus thinking that I have to get a PTE for this class or I'll never get out of this place. As I ran past our proud Bruin mascot, I turned the corner up Bruin Walk and, Boom!, right over a guy with a "Boycott Grapes" poster.

I picked him up off the ground while he argued quite strongly that everybody should boycott grapes because of the poor conditions for the workers and because the pesticides being used are killing them. It is probably a very worthy cause. But not at 7:59 in the morning. The body may be moving, but the brain is in neutral. A dead stall.

I walked forward through a maze of people, movements, organizations, institutions, religions, revolutions and boycotters, and thought I had suddenly been transported to Venice Beach. But there was no beach.

Remember, the brain is in "slow-mo" right now.

I then bumped off a guy selling the "L.A. Times . . . Get the L.A. Times at a special rate." After shaking my head, I made a quick move to the outside to look for some room to move. When I was about to round the corner, I was stopped by a girl from the "Chinese, Jewish, Christian, ski team, etc.. fill-in-the-blank association; for any students who can write their names on their enrollment form."

Frantic (the lugubrious gongs of our beloved clock could be heard in the distance), I began to look for blockers, other students trapped in this mass of confusion.

I made yet another move, this time to the inside, and followed this blue backpack around two tables and then back onto the walk. I stiff-armed a guy — "Have you registered to vote at your current address?" — and moved toward my left and my last obstacle. I had, by this time, stopped any attempts at answering or acknowledging any person who stood between me and Moore Hall.

I had almost cleared the final hurdle when all of UCLA students need a better understanding of the evils of racism

By Shirl Buss

At first it was upsetting to see fraternities and sororities allotted three speaking slots at the "Special Senate Committee Hearings on Racial Ethnic Tensions on the University of California Campuses" chaired by Senator Art Torres at UCLA, Tuesday, October 4. I couldn't understand why organizations that historically have been bastions of institutionalized racial segregation and perpetrators of numerous racist acts would be asked to speak at these hearings. There was so little time for people of color from eight UC campuses to speak out on the multitude of issues and incidents of racism, so why would even one minute be given to members of the dominant culture?

However, it was quite instructive to hear Gary Hobart, Mike Meehan and Ellen Thornton speak. Their words and actions blatantly revealed the depth of their ignorance and lack of sensitivity to racism in its many insidious forms. Although the topic of the day was clearly spelled out, their speeches were unfocused and for the most part self-congratulatory. Most denied that racism existed on campus. All testified that they were having positive experiences as students on campus. Or if they did acknowledge racial tension, they often blamed people of color for the problems. The message was: "things on campus really aren't that bad; after all, we get along with the administration." They seemed genuinely baffled as to why only three black women pledged sororities this fall, or why more people of color weren't willing to "cross these bounds" and join fraternities. One speaker absolved himself of any further responsibility by saying that "racial tension existed before I was born," implying that there was nothing he could do about it.

Not one fraternity or sorority speaker validated the feelings and experiences of the people of color who were passionately speaking out on the many institutional and personal racial incidents affecting their academic progress in the UC system. I find it hard to believe that the whites could ignore stories of verbal harassment, hate mail, violent incidents, alienation, isolation and demoralization for people of color that occur daily on campuses. But on this day they did. It was obvious that the whites genuinely did not have a clue or insight into their role in the perpetration of racism. Their testimony only exacerbated and aggravated the tensions. Collectively these speakers (and one other white student) demonstrated the depth and tenacity of the problem of racism on campus. None took responsibility for making changes within their organization.

I feel that, as whites, we must move beyond this point. It is time to stop hiding behind the innocence of "we didn't know," "we didn't understand" and "we didn't mean to." Even if the intentions of the white students aren't consciously harmful, the ignorance of many actions create a harmful effect on people of color.

This is exemplified by an incident that occurred at an Orange County high school this week. Some white students painted their faces black, and imitated a singing group for the school assembly. Understandably, the black students were hurt and upset. The white students just kept repeating over and over again that they meant no harm. The fact is that they probably did mean no harm, but the black students were harmed by the insensitive actions. It's time to stop hiding behind professed innocence, start listening to people of color and look at the impact of such behavior.

I would hope that in response to the educational work that people of color have done, that fraternities and sororities and other white organizations would meet the challenge and start to take more leadership and creative steps in combating racism. A student from UC Santa Barbara mentioned that there are films available to sensitize whites on what it would be like to be a black on campus. There are other wonderful audio visual materials for whites who want to become more aware and sensitive. I would hope that fraternities and sororities would use some of this material during their initiation weeks. There are also many people of color who run "cultural awareness" workshops for whites. "Greeks" could sponsor some of these sessions in their houses during the year. Leadership in their organizations could encourage and support membership enrollment in the ethnic diversity classes available on campus. Fraternities and sororities could invite speakers from various causes (United Farm Workers, anti-apartheid) to their houses for educational evenings. A whole series on "celebrating differences" could be developed. Events, books and resources from a variety of cultural perspectives can be made available for members to begin to develop a greater understanding and respect for people of color. Offers can be made to the black sororities and fraternities to support their different service projects such as Head Start. To avoid paternalism, a good start would be to do a fundraising campaign in support of a cause. In summary, fraternities and sororities could do much internal "house cleaning" and work toward the goal of developing philosophies, attitudes and programs to reflect a multi-cultural climate.

As a white student, I am concerned that most other white students see racism as people of color's "problem." Most overlook or excuse the subtleties of racism that are prevalent in our institutions, our language and in the white American value system. Because the white race is considered the "norm," racism has been excused as an issue in the white community. People of color are asked to bear the responsibility of fighting for the same rights that white Americans enjoy from birth.

We must develop a way of identifying the issues of racism as they exist in the white community and help white people grow and learn about their role as whites in a racist society. White people must help each other come out from behind the myths that have sheltered them for so long and focus on the difficult realities and discrepancies that are present in American society. I would hope that fraternities and sororities would accept the challenge and begin to lead the way.

a sudden I was tripped up from behind. "Foul." I cried. "It's just not fair." I began to look for a ref. Instead, as I was getting up, I was looking directly into a flier, "Do you bleed blue and gold?" The guy behind the poster was looking at me too. "Do you need a cool job?"

I made it to my class, ten minutes late. I did get the PTE, though, and later in the day I overheard two stuffy suits talking to each other: "did you see that madhouse on the Walk today? They've got to do something about it. It's like a zoo down there."

I began to rethink the anger that had swelled within me earlier in the morning. Sure, it's hectic trying to walk up that hill. Yes, it gets to be boring after a while, and yes, at 8:00 in the morning the mind is not equipped to deal with the strategy involved to try to get through it all alive. But I'd rather it be busy, a zoo, than nothing at all. I don't want to get too stuffy, too arrogant or too narrow.

Besides, I'm walking with a lineman from the team tomorrow . . . I need another PTE.

'Dream Houses' surveys domestic architecture

By J.D. Wolverton, Senior Staff Writer

■ BOOK: Dream Houses. By Mary Gilliatt. Little, Brown and Co. $35.00 hardbound. 208 pages.

"Three things are to be looked for in a building. That it stand on the right spot; that it be securely founded; that it be successfully executed." So wrote the German poet and philosopher Goethe some two centuries ago.

Beyond this eminently practical advice, there is an added dimension which people over the ages have sought to achieve in their dwelling places. Those with the means to indulge the most extravagant flights of fancy have embellished their homes with features which reflect very personal tastes and idiosyncrasies.

Kings and nobles have built grand palaces which have served the purpose of providing both a house and a vehicle for the ostentatious display of their wealth and social status.

Louis XIV's chateau at Versailles is perhaps the supreme expression of royal hubris in European history. It set a standard for palatial building which exercised an influence on continental rulers for a century or more.

Mary Gilliatt, an interior designer and successful author in her field, has provided us with a fascinating tour of some superb examples of domestic architecture in her new book, Dream Houses. She takes us inside thirty-five greatly variegated houses situated around the world, which more than measure up to her title's description.

Gilliatt groups these buildings — which range in size from renovated medieval castles to country cottages — under four groupings, exemplifying "The Romantic Ideal," "The Past Relived," "The Personal Vision," and "The Spirit of Place."

Sir Cecil Beaton's Reddish, an 18th-century English country house of engaging charm, is a residence suffused with light and warmth. There is a plush Edwardian flavor to much of the interior decoration, which contrasts very well with the formality of the molded ceilings and marble pillars in the entrance hall, for example.

Francis Bacon said that the love of gardens was "the purest of human pleasures." This was a view shared by Beaton, who surrounded his house with a splendid garden, composed of arbours, box hedges, fragrant flowers and pools of water.

Alnwick Castle, the country seat of the Dukes of Northumberland and located near the border between England and Scotland, is a most imposing structure. It provides one of the outstanding examples of how a medieval building — originally constructed in the 12th and 13th centuries and built for fortification in war — can be turned into a liveable, indeed comfortable living environment. (Another, more famous example would be Windsor Castle, in which the royal family spends much of the year.)

The interiors were modelled on the Roman palace style of the 16th-century Renaissance by the Italian, Montiroli, who was commissioned by the fourth duke in 1855. The Red Drawing Room is particularly impressive, with a rich red damask, ornamented with gold, covering the walls, and red and gilt furniture in the Louis Seize Style. Amidst the prevailing crimson tonality of the walls and decor, the white Carrara marble fireplace stands as a gleaming centerpiece.

Oak Alley is a beautifully-restored Southern plantation house, situated in Louisiana. It evokes the ante-bellum world of Gone with Funk lives: the Incorporated Thang Band.

Inc. T. B.: Funk no longer de-Funk-ed

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

Prepare yourselves for the Incorporated Thang Band.

No. Let's make that — Prepare yourselves for the Funk.

That's right. Funk is no longer dead. And the king of the Funk himself, George Clinton, has made sure that his latest offering will bring back the groove we've all been missing.

For those not familiar with George by name, you definitely know his sound. George and the Funk are synonymous.

Funk began in the early '70s when George took it upon himself to introduce a new dance-floor beat. It was disco with finesse, pop with intelligence, controversy with humor. It was labeled as "Black music," yet the appeal extended far beyond any one ethnic origin or nationality. It was Funk for all, and all for Funk.

George's creations as writer, producer and performer are many: Parliament/Funkadelic, Jimmy G. and the Tackheads, and The Incorporated Thang Band (where he currently shares writing credits) were all influenced by the father of Funk, not to mention the solo career he embarked on during the early '80s. And with producer Bootsy Collins (who shared production credits with George on the Inc. T.B.), a solo album from George, and another from his son Tracy all on the way, the Funk revival is already in full force.

George isn't doing it alone, though. The Inc. T.B. is, as George describes in a press release, "the first of the next generation of projects from the Funk." Meet Andre Foxxe: head of the Inc. T.B., singer, musician, writer, producer, star. Well, don't take the star part too seriously — although he is.

The Inc. T. B.'s debut Lifestyles of the Roach and Famous sheds a different perspective from the Robin Leach school of riches-to-more-riches, as Arts and Entertainment learned in a recent phone interview with Andre.

Andre makes clear an important fact which most take for granted. "People recognize things — popularity, fame, whatever. People think that we're famous or we're rich, we got all these big, hot things going for us. But not really, you know. We're just like everyone else, trying to pay the bills."

That's where the roach comes in. "A cockroach — like one of the most famous insects left. You know what I mean. It really has nothing!"

Well, I don't know if that's entirely accurate. You see, Andre, and the rest of the Inc. T.B., used to be the Tackheads portion of Jimmy G. And with Jimmy G. out of the picture,

Skinny Puppy's brutal, liberating shock therapy

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

"To hell with any bullshit" — Skinny Puppy, 1988.

With an artist such as Skinny Puppy, there is no such word as conformity . . . or nonconformity for that matter. There is just the brutally shocking landscape of what Skinny Puppy observes in their own frightful world.

Through distorted synths and keyboards and graphically offending live performances, the "uncompromising" trio of Cevin Key (distorted synths, percussion, songwriting), Nivek Ogre (vocals, horn treatment, songwriting), and Dwayne Goettel (keyboards, synths, songwriting), deals with the extremities of what many of us prefer to label as life.

Take their last European Head Trauma Anti-vivisectionist tour, which they've currently revamped and brought to the States. The theme: "Kill the cure with cures that kill." The visuals: graphic film footage of laboratory experiments on animals. The story: Nivek transforming from the ignorant man to a laboratory vivisectionist to the "enlightened" man to the tortured test subject itself.

Arts & Entertainment had the fascinating opportunity to dive into an often repulsive, yet unavoidable, portrait of harsh extremities and grim reality through the eyes of Cevin Key.

"No matter where you go, you can't escape from it. You know, extremes are there all the time to deal with in life. Whether or not a more extreme mode has to be taken (by us), or whether we should just mellow out, that depends on the mood of the day."

To Skinny Puppy, life has been seen in many disturbing stages: through the eyes of a dog, the horrifying atmosphere of gothic evolution, and hardcore violence. And the latest vision to arise in this industrial rage, is animal rights and anti-vivisection.

What's this? Skinny Puppy,

Sci-fi 'Alien Nation' less than satisfying

By Jim Pickrell, Staff Writer

■ FILM: Alien Nation. Director Graham Baker. Producer Gale Ann Hurd. With James Caan, Mandy Patinkin, Leslies Bevis. A Twentieth Century Fox release.

Alien Nation is set in the near future, when a large group of alien refugees have settled on earth, living in ghettos and trying to assimilate themselves into society. Written by first-time screenwriter Rockne O'Bannon and directed by Graham Baker, it's the latest in a series of intense, action-packed science fiction films produced by Gale Ann Hurd, whose previous successes (together with writer-director James Cameron, who didn't work on this film) include Terminator and Aliens.

In the '40s and '50s, science fiction pictured a new and improved future filled with meals-in-a-pill, flying wings, and streamlined rocket ships to Mars. Following the current trend that started with Ridley Scott's classic Blade Runner, Alien Nation shows a tomorrow that's dark, dirty and oppressive — a more pessimistic extrapolation of the world of today.

James Caan plays Sykes, a detective paired up with an Alien after his partner is killed in a convenience store robbery. Caan's not happy about the new partnership because it's a "slag" (an Alien) that killed his partner. But that may be what it takes to find his killers.

The "Newcomers," as the Aliens are more politely euphemized, are refugees; more than 200,000 of them are gradually being integrated into society after their startling and unexpected arrival in a huge spaceship. It's a difficult situation; they're despised for their odd looks and the slums they live in, hated when intelligence and hard work make them successful.

The search for the killers leads the pair on a twisting trail through sleazy bars, erotic Alien nightclubs, sweatshop factories and trash-lined downtown slums where Aliens that haven't been able to fit in get drunk on sour milk and lurk in the dark waiting for for a chance to improve their lives.

It turns out that the convenience store killings were cover for a bigger scheme involving drugs and more trouble than Sykes ever wanted to find.

James Caan works well as the detective, but the story gives him a stereotype role that's difficult to pull out of. If you saw Bob "A Toon Killed My Partner" Hoskins in Roger Rabbit, then you know this guy's story. Sam Francisco, the Alien Detective, is played very sympathetically by Mandy Patinkin, whose best role to date is Inigo "Prepare to Die" Montoya in The Princess Bride. He always seems a little bit stiff, but

Hanks, Field miss target in 'Punchline'

Lilah Krystick (Field), Steven Gold (Hanks) crack each other up as they try out material in 'Punchline.'

By Barbara Archer
Contributor

■ FILM: Punchline. Written and directed by David Seltzer. Producer Daniel Melnick and Mark Rachmil. With Sally Field, Tom Hanks, John Goodman, and Mark Rydell. Presented by Columbia Pictures.

Dying is easy. Comedy is hard. Uh, yeah.

This gimmick slogan that accompanies paraphernalia for the film Punchline is about as ambiguous as the movie's plot. Punchline can't make up its mind about whether it wants to tell the story of an manic comic who becomes infatuated with an unhappy housewife, or whether it wants to document the stand-up comedy scene. And besides its schizophrenic nature, the comedy isn't that funny. In fact, the only jokes I can remember from the film fall outside of the context of the stand-up routines.

The film opens with an introduction to Steven Gold (Tom Hanks), an unprepared medical student who has overslept for his oral exams. Gold banters with the examiners who finally kick him out of school. Fair enough. He likes to do stand-up anyway.

Enter Sally Field as Lilah Krytsick, a Jersey housewife who claims that she's always been able to make people laugh, "even as a little girl," though she is completely unfunny as a comedienne. Her cartoonish family — a husband (John Goodman, one of the half-wit robbers from Raising Arizona) and three daughters — want a wife and mother, but Lilah is having trouble juggling family life and late-night comedy gigs.

Lilah sees Steven perform and decides because of his ease on stage that he will be her comedy guru, despite the fact that he is, in no uncertain terms, a jerk. He ignores Lilah, then tries to con her out of her vacation money in exchange for writing her jokes.

The most unbelievable scene in the movie occurs when one night, as the comics are about ready to go up, Steven discovers that there are network scouts in the audience. He revs up to wow the scouts only to discover that they were not talent scouts, but his demanding father and brother whom he hasn't told that he dropped out of med school.

Steven breaks down on stage (painfully over-acted by Hanks), crying about how his father forced him into med school, though he couldn't stand the sight of blood. He blubbers the purveyors of symbolic evil (as some say), with a purpose other than to disturb?

GOTHIC: Skinny Puppy

Cevin jumps right into this with a crass little comment. "Yes, of course, anything that is nonconforming is evil. However, the big difference is now we've got a purpose. Well, I can see why people say that at times. We've gone through our gothic stages, our violent stages. Now we're taking the best of both and applying it to the purpose (of animal liberation)."

Obviously, Skinny Puppy isn't one of those middle-of-the-road bands — it's either one side or the other. They've chosen to take the other — something like the anarchistic approach to making a controversial statement.

They've had as many labels (e.g. sadists, death rockers, industrialists, etc.) pinned to them as dogs have fleas, which has forced them to take such extreme positions.

So do any of these labels hold any foundation?

"Not exclusively. I think these labels are misaimed in some instances. A lot of people take a name and and apply it to anything that's weird. It's not really suitable to me."

By the way, Skinny Puppy is nothing new to the industry. Since '83, the angered synth-punk has hammered its way through three albums — Bites, Mind: The Perpetual Intercourse, and Cleanse, Fold, and Manipulate — and the soon-to-be-released VIVIsectVI carries on the tradition with yet more eerie landscapes for listeners throughout our world.

Yet this latest glimpse of horror, with its aforementioned purpose, marks Skinny Puppy as the first band to deal directly with animal rights.

"Well, we've always loved animals. And we've never really realized that doing it on an album or in a show was so obvious for us. It's a good cause and it's not changing our format that much. It's something I see we'll take a further stance on in the future."

And as far as format is concerned, and those that find offense in it . . "Wimps! No. No. No. We don't listen to comments about the way we play music. I mean, we're not going to sell out or go commercial or anything. There wouldn't be any point in it because we're in it for ourselves. We need this music to listen to as well as any other person. So, as far as I'm concerned, it's the only position to be in."

Whether one enters the Skinny Puppy maelstrom through the captivating albums or the macabre presented on stage, the listener really has no choice. The fascination with abomination takes control in an express ride to the very depths of imagination.

As Cevin sees it, even with all the shock therapy, "I don't think there's anything to worry about with our listeners. It's like going to a movie — pure escapism."

And he still reminds the people of the world, as well as our science community, "We've got a purpose and I hope people can understand that. We're not going to tread on anybody's path. But we'll try the best we can to make a statement for our furry friends."

Caan and Mandy Patinkin in 'Alien Nation.'

CAAN: 'Alien Nation'

gives an air of humanity to a very difficult part. Terrence Stamp is fine in the role of William Harcourt, sophisticated Alien entrepreneur who has absorbed the worst of American culture. And Leslies "Have You Ever Slept with One of Us?" Bevis is great as the Alien stripper who seems to be hanging out with the wrong crowd. The only criticism you can give is that maybe her part should have been a little bit larger.

Slick special effects for the film were done by Alec Gillis and his colleagues at Stan Winston, the same group that worked with producer Gale Ann Hurd on previous films Terminator and Aliens (which earned them an Oscar for best visual effects). Their warehouse up in the valley is a toymaker's workshop full of latex make-up and mechanical gadgets, and they are one of the top companies in this field.

While the film has a rapid-fire pace, an exciting premise, very "Human" characters, and many amusing moments, there is still something less than satisfying about it. All the elements were there, but somehow it didn't totally click. Part of it was that the story asks for a bigger ending, part of it was that they come too close in their attempt to make the Aliens human-like. Despite great style and a fascinating build-up, it comes across as just another male-bonding police drama once you get past the effects and make-up. Opportunities were missed: the basic idea is really great, but they should have taken it further.

Which means that compared to what it could be, Alien Nation is a near miss. But it's still a gripping, exciting film, and is definitely worth seeing.

'DREAM': Architecture

The Wind, with its grand avenue of gnarled oak trees — planted over two centuries ago — and splendid facade of two-story Doric columns and wide verandah. Oak Alley somehow managed to survive both the ravages of the Civil War, and the disastrous weather and economic depression that ruined so many plantations in the late 19th century.

Bought in 1925 by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Stewart, it was restored over a two-year period at a cost of $60,000. The Stewarts furnished the house in a traditional American style, creating a wonderful period ambience through a careful selection of objects and furniture. Mrs. Stewart willed the house to a non-profit making trust, which has kept it in top-notch condition since her death in 1972. Like several of the houses illustrated in the book, it is open to visitors today.

Gilliatt has included a couple of relatively modest residences in her survey, illustrating a more urban, contemporary style of living. One, a New York Loft situated between Grand Central Station and Greenwich Village, was created out of 3,000 square feet on the top floor of a commercial building constructed in 1912. It was completely open, with no interior walls. It had great possibilities however, with huge windows on all four sides providing plenty of natural light. David and Caro Lloyd-Jacob bought the loft in 1982, and transformed it into a warm and inviting living space over the next few years.

Ray Gill, an Australian architect, converted an abandoned inner-city factory in Sydney into a beautiful environment, with an emphasis on open-air living. The walls are punctured with wide openings onto the outside, and there is a luxuriant garden and considerable use of plants within to erase the barriers between interior and exterior. Gill put in some handsome hardwood floors, and has furnished the place in a spare, geometrical style.

Dream Houses is printed on high quality paper, with its all-color illustrations reproduced exceedingly well. The book is recommended to all readers of Architectural Digest, and anyone else who appreciates good living.

'PUNCHLINE': Hanks

about how he was scarred for life when his high school dissecting partner flung a frog's eye at him. He is ushered off the stage by Romeo (Mark Rydell), the club's emcee, into the sympathetic arms of Lilah with whom he proceeds to fall in love. Huh?

All of sudden Steven is more than willing to coach Lilah, taking her on a comedy club spree and working with her on material.

He takes her to a hospital performance of his where his asshole/philanthropist complex continues. There, Steven, who has been unsupportive and rude to his fellow comics, stops to talk to a sick boy with Sally Field looking on with her best Gidget ingenue look.

He and Lilah share a passionate kiss in a cab where she proclaims that she loves her husband, and later he becomes infuriated when she refuses his marriage proposal. Wait a minute, I thought this was supposed to be about stand-up comedy?

Getting back to that subject, Punchline uses real-life stand up comedians who are caricatures rather than characters. Included in the menagerie: the proverbial I-dress-up-in-drag comedian, the old comedian whose dreams of fame have passed him by, a black comic who stereotypically jokes about being well-hung, and the ultimate caricature/character — Lilah: Being a woman, of course, all that she has to joke about is housework and her husband.

Good performances are not what this film lacks. Hanks does a good job most of the time with the portrayal of the confused Steven. His material is not hilarious, but he seems at ease on stage doing stand-up. The roles of Lilah's kids (she has three, but we only see two, played by Candace Cameron and Bianca Rose) are well done. The kids' comic timing is better than some of the film's professional comedians.

These performances, however, cannot make up for the schizophrenic, unbelievable plot and unfunny comedic material in a movie ostensibly about stand-up comedy.

Smithereens' 'Thoughts' worth hearing

By Tom Huang
Contributor

■ ALBUM: Green Thoughts. The Smithereens. Capitol/Enigma.

The energetic Smithereens come back from a strong first album to an even stronger sequel in Green Thoughts, which encompasses a wide variety of different sounds and thoughts. Its strength lies in passionate lyrics, expert guitar/drum orchestration, and catchy tunes.

The album opens up with one of the Smithereens' semi-hits, "Only A Memory." The song sets a tone for the whole album. If there's any comparison to what music the Smithereens convey in Green Thoughts, it would have to be lyrics courtesy of Morrissey (sad, lost love, lost everything) and music courtesy of R.E.M. (lots of driving acoustics along with mellow guitar twangs).

The mix produces something very, very pleasing. "Only A Memory" features the pleading voice of Pat DiNizio ("And it's only a memory / Of what our love was going to be / Only a memory / Broken bits of you and me"), with well-mixed guitar solos and background.

They continue with the same genre in another popular single, "House That We Used To Live In." This is a song of more energy — energy deriyed from dark loneliness ("A house is not a home / And when you're home alone / You'll find that it's hard / That's it's harder to believe (or something like that)." Again the music of Jim Babjak (guitar), Dennis Diken (drums), Mike Mesaros (bass) and singer DiNizio (who also plays guitar) melt perfectly with the words and is extremely well done.

The band takes a turn with "Something New," which uses an acoustic guitar and almost sounds country but works. It's a slowdown from the rest of the tracks — but a good one, because it prevents the whole album from sounding the same and shows the band's diversity. Other slow ones that keep the album running in different directions include "Especially For You" and the title track.

Two of the best tracks on the album show the strong points of the group: "Drown In My Own Tears" and "The World We Know" (which has a guest vocal from Del Shannon) capture all of the band's vitality and DiNizio's lyrics are felt full force.

The Smithereens are definitely a band to watch in the coming years. Green Thoughts was conceived in four weeks; it's hard to imagine a better job they could do on an album, even with more time. The chemistry of DiNizio's voice and powerful back-up music create a sound of uniqueness and strength. If you enjoy basic rock, or even "modern" rock, this album is a must.

Funk

Andre runs the show now — of course, thanks to George.

"You know, I've been working with George for 10 to 12 years. I've been doing it since I was a kid. And George's ability to breed Funk rhythm — it just brought my musical talent out further. So with Jimmy G. gone, he gave me a shot at it."

Well, being the curious type that I am, I had to find out what it's like working with a great such as George. "It's been a definite learning experience. We like to call it the George Clinton University. And I'm an alumni, now. He's a real interesting guy — real down-to-earth fellow. And basically, just too creative — too creative. Everything that comes out of his mouth is a song."

So this Clinton grad has quite a burden on his shoulders. He's the beginning to another genre of the Funk.

However, Funk has seen a decline in popularity in the last year or so. Much of the Funk has been recycled, copied, or run into the ground. In other words, originality has lost precedent and the lack of popularity shows.

Andre doesn't quite believe in the decline, though. "I wouldn't say it was going downhill." He pauses for a moment, "I want to word this correctly. What Funk needed was a resurgence to see where it was going. I think this may be a little harsh, but a lot of Black music has been a little watered down. And a lot of people say Funk's dead. But we made it, and we still make it. We've just not been played to social acceptance. We're here to put some backbone in it — or some front-bone. You know, just bone!"

And with this strengthening of the Funk, Andre wants to make clear an important idea which shares a great deal of meaning with him. "The whole concept of Black music is kind of neat and I think that Black music in general has gained a broader scope of acceptance. But putting a label on it like that — it makes my generation have to work that much harder. I'm Black. What makes me any different than Lionel Ritchie's pop. You know, it's all just good 'ol funky music!"

However, the Funk has quite a race to run. Pop music, British music, metal music are all running the show in '88. Andre doesn't seem too worried, though.

"We are the other contender. I won't say that we're too far behind, but our movement is happening. And I think at the end of the race, we'll be the winner."

Considering what Clinton's University has in store for the airwaves in the months to come, Andre may just have a point. And the Inc. T.B.'s first single "Body Jackin' " is showing strong potential on the charts.

Andre thinks to himself for a moment and adds his optimistic words of wisdom. "Things to come, I promise you, will not be a let down. We want to be around for a while — not as a group, but I'm speaking of Funk in general. And I'm not talking about the clone funk — I'm talking the Funk."

With the Incorporated Thang Band as the christening to the next generation of Funk, I believe Clinton, Andre are going to turn the tables on a fading groove. Prepare yourselves. Funk is no longer de-Funk-ed.

No use coming to help me now
I've learned my lesson, anyhow!
Believe me, once I get unpasted
From all this paper I have wasted,
I'll try no other crazy caper,
I'll read the Want Ads in the paper,
And, if I fail to find help there,
That's still no reason to despair —
Mom says you've never really tried Until you've run a Classified!

isting and, yes, it will still send a team to Pasadena in January.

Right now, it appears that the top contenders for the Big Ten crown are an odd pair of teams. The first is an old favorite, the Michigan Wolverines.

After tough opening losses to Miami and Notre Dame, the Wolverines have bounced back with three consecutive wins, including Saturday's 17-3 handling of Michigan State, to move to 2-0 in conference play.

The loss leaves the defending Rose Bowl champion Spartans at a pathetic 0-4-1 overall, 0-1-1 in conference play.

Right up there with head coach Bo Schembechler's gang, though, is a school known more for its pick-and-rolls to the hoop than its post patterns for touchdowns: the Indiana Hoosiers.

The Hoosiers (4-0-1, 2-0 in Big Ten play), led by talented running back Anthony Thompson, the nation's No. 2 rusher, pummeled Ohio State, 41-7, in Bloomington, Indiana. The win no doubt set off a frenzied celebration in the streets of America's heartland, as it was Indiana's first win over Ohio State in Indiana since the Roosevelt Administration.

No, not Franklin Roosevelt's administration. Teddy Roosevelt's administration. Meaning it was the first time since 1904.

Thompson ran for four touchdowns in the first half and finished with 190 yards.

Illinois and Iowa, after both schools had dismal non-conference starts, have crept back into the picture as the Illini shut out Purdue, 20-0, to raise their conference mark to 2-0 and the Hawkeyes dumped Wisconsin, 31-6, to go to 1-0-1 in the conference.

Next week, games to watch include Michigan at Iowa, Washington at USC and Washington State at Arizona.

day when Stanford and Hardy were shut out for the fifth time in six games.

Nistl again, "The defense has a new attitude— blue collar—we just say no, that means shut outs."

And it wasn't Nancy Reagan who instilled that attitude, was it?

"Sigi worked us real hard in practice all this week—a lot of running without even touching the ball. Back to basics—we worked hard."

Already working hard to hold off the Cardinal counterattack, the Bruins were forced to work harder once Lapper was sent off.

The freshman received a caution in the first half, so his second hard foul at 77:30 resulted in a ejection—reducing the Bruin ranks to only 10.

Even a man down, it was UCLA which proved to have the best chance to score late, on a play strikingly reminiscent of Hardy's earlier miss.

This time, Aaron Muth took a bad Jim Kilfoli pass and actually dribbled around Helling towards the goal. But Kilfoli redeemed himself by blocking the subsequent Muth shot.

The artificial turf surface in Memorial Stadium disrupted the normal style of play for both teams—most of the action was centered in the neutral third of the field.

But, in the end, it was UCLA and its new attitude which capitalized on its chances and won the opening Pacific Coast Soccer Tournament.

"We're halfway there," announced Schmid to his team, "one win down and one more to go against Cal."

Trojans, Cougars roll on

By Brian Murphy
Sports Editor

While most Southland football fans see the eventual Rose Bowl participant from the Pacific 10 to be decided solely by the much-anticipated USC-UCLA clash on November 19, there are a few other West Coast schools still making some noise after three weeks of conference football.

Schools like Washington and Washington State.

As for the other side of the Rose Bowl coin, the Big 10, there are even more schools still making their share of noise.

Schools like Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Iowa.

Leading the Pac-10 this week, however, is USC. The Trojans, after Saturday's convincing 42-14 pasting of previously-undefeated Oregon, are now 3-0 in the conference, a mark just ahead of UCLA's 2-0.

The Trojans were led by quarterback Rodney Peete's 270 yards passing on 17 of 33 attempts, two touchdowns and one interception. The Trojans were able to take advantage of the fact that Oregon was without starting quarterback Bill Musgrave, who was injured.

As a result, Oregon was a team without an offense, and the game went accordingly. Still, it was sweet revenge for USC, which had suffered an upset loss at the hands of the Ducks last year.

In Pasadena, the Bruins kept pace for the year-end meeting with a 38-21 win over Oregon State (see page 48).

But another team is making noise in the West, too—the Huskies of Washington. After winning their first three games unimpressively, many wrote the Huskies off as a mediocre team that would get its due from UCLA. Washington showed, however, in its 24-17 loss to the Bruins that it was a football team with very few flaws.

And they jumped right back into the race with a 10-0 win over Arizona State in Tempe on Saturday, making them 1-1 in the conference and setting up a big game in Los Angeles against USC this Saturday.

But the Huskies are not the only team from Washington to be thinking Pasadena this year. Surprisingly, the oft-maligned Cougars of Washington State are a team that has shown explosive tendencies this year and are currently ranked as the nation's top offensive team.

After beating Illinois, Minnesota and Tennessee on the road this year and suffering a conference loss to Oregon, the Cougs continued to roar in Pullman, as they dismantled California, 44-13, behind the arm of quarterback Timm Rosenbach.

Rosenbach, who is already having a big year, threw for 281 yards on Saturday, and tailback Steve Broussard rushed for 190 yards, his fifth game this year over 100 yards, to lead Wazzu in front of a homecoming crowd.

In the only other Pac-10-related action, Stanford improved to 2-3 overall with a 44-12 win over San Jose State.

In the Midwest, a conference that has been kicked around by critics nationwide is starting to emerge with a couple of strong Rose Bowl contenders.

Yes, the Big Ten is still ex-category, but members of the line were the first to admit that Saturday's performance was not their best and to give credit to the defense of OSU.

"I think we could have played a lot better game," said left tackle Bobby Menifield. "I guess our team learned from this experience that no team is really ever down or beat. There was a lot of frustration (on our side).

"I know were going to get yelled at and hollered at come Monday, but we won the game; that's all that counts," said Menifield, who shared the general feeling of relief that the game was over.

No one on the Bruin side would admit afterwards that he took Saturday's game lightly. In fact, respect for the Beavers was abundant. "We knew they were a tough team coming into the game," said left guard Rick Meyer, who cited OSU's narrow, 28-21 defeat at the hands of Colorado and their come-from-behind, 17-16 victory over Cal as evidence. "I give them credit. . . . I knew they wouldn't quit, it's just their nature."

On the question of whether the team let down after the 21-0 lead Meyer said, "From my standpoint I didn't, I don't think the other guys did. . . .They have good players, the Pac-10 is a tough league. Period." But, similar to the other members of the line, Meyers admitted, "We have to improve."

As Aikman's success must be shared between him and his line, the quarterback shared the criticism of the sometimes-lackluster offensive performance as well. "OSU brought a lot of heat, I didn't do a good job, the line didn't do a good job. . .you can't blame just one person or group, it's a team effort, and we had a lot of breakdowns," said Aikman. The senior's quest for the Heisman rests in large part on the play of his line, and his numbers so far (84 for 127, 1003 yards, 14 TDs, 4 interceptions) show that support has rarely been lacking.

Head coach Terry Donahue chose to praise the play of State's defense, singling out right end Pellom McDaniels, who forced one of Aikman's fumbles, but did not leave his offense blameless. "I'm upset that we didn't handle the pressure as well as we could have," said Donahue.

fey, who was streaking down the sideline.

Four minutes later, Pellom McDaniel blindsided Aikman in the pocket, causing him to lose the ball. The officials ruled Aikman was not throwing, calling it a fumble. Three plays later, Robb Thomas got behind Marcus Turner and the UCLA secondary, and it was another touchdown for the mad-bomber, Wilhelm.

Darryl Henley explained that there were two breakdowns on both touchdown plays.

"I guess we learned that we are not as good as we thought. They were stretching our defense, and they sent a back down the sideline that we didn't even see. They managed to get behind us. The second one was a pump fake that fooled us."

The teams went into the lockerroom at halftime 21-14, UCLA for a gut check, and the Beavers for some celebrating.

UCLA got a field goal on their first possession of the second half, a 37-yarder by Alfredo Velasco. Both teams struggled offensively for the rest of the half, UCLA turning the ball over twice, with a fumble and an interception. The Beavers lost the ball twice on a fumble and a costly interception on the UCLA goal line, as OSU was trying to cut the Bruin lead to three.

The Bruins put it out of reach in the fourth, however, as Aikman hit Reggie Moore for a six-yard touchdown. On the previous play, Aikman showed why it's better to be lucky than good sometimes, when he forced a pass to a well-covered Corwin Anthony. The pass was tipped right to Reggie Moore, who took the ball 30 yards to the Beaver six-yard line.

Oregon State got one more touchdown, after a 76-yard drive that saw Wilhelm throw on almost every play, but UCLA hammered out their own 78-yard drive behind the running of freshman Shawn Wills and a one- yard touchdown pass to Anthony.

So UCLA escaped a bout with the midseason blahs and won going away, more on overall talent than on intensity.

"It's hard" Donahue said. "Your kids read in the paper about how good they are, and how big they are going to win. Oregon State was hungry. They had a lot of intensity and an excellent scheme on offense. We lost our concentration. I'm glad that we put 38 points on the board.

"Overall, I'm happy we got our fifth win against a good, tough opponent, and we got our second conference win. We made some nice plays and came out healthy.

For Wilhelm and the Beavers, things were not as bright.

"I don't know," said a discouraged Wilhelm. "We looked good, made a run at them, but we made some big mistakes and let it get away from us. I don't look at this as a moral victory. It was a loss, pure and simple. It's disappointing."

BRUIN NOTES — Shawn Wills finished the game with 92 yards on 16 carries. . .Charles Arbuckle said in the locker room after the game that he hopes to return for the Arizona game. "The knee is about 60-70%. I don't want to come back before it's ready. . . Brian Brown should also be ready for action next weekend. The Bruins' next game is against California, a 1 p.m. start at Memorial Stadium in Berkeley. . .Cal hasn't beaten UCLA since 1971. . . The Bears got hammered this weekend by Washington State, 44-13.

Daiva Tomkus and the women's volleyball team swept the Arizona schools this weekend.

Volleyball

fifth in a Volleyball Monthly pre-season poll, the Bruins have shocked the volleyball world by pounding out victories that they were supposed to have lost.

First was the victory over the pre-season No. 1-pick, the University of Illinois, which boasted the return of all six starters from the previous year. Next was the victory over the defending national champions, the University of Hawaii, on its home court. Third, the Bruins knocked over Stanford University and, in the process, avenged the loss of the 1987 Pac-10 title. Most recently, UCLA trounced Midwest rival the University of Texas on its home court.

The recent victory over ASU follows in the same pattern. Consistent and aggressive play allowed the Bruins to easily defeat the Pac-10 rival in three quick games, even though starting junior outside hitter Jenny Crocker, suffering from bronchitis, failed to make the trip.

The No. 20-ranked Sun Devils, who recently handed fourth-ranked BYU a loss, fell to the Bruins in just over 80 minutes. The scores were 15-12, 15-8 and 15-11. Although play from both sides of the net was lethargic, the final statistics continue to reflect Bruin consistency in play.

As a team, UCLA compiled a hitting percentage of .306, compared to .185 for the Sun Devils. All-American middle blocker Daiva Tomkus continues to lead the team and the Pac-10 in hitting percentage. Against ASU, she led all players on the court, with 14 kills on 25 attempts, for a hitting percentage of .520. Freshman middle blocker and outside hitter Elaine Youngs tallied 12 kills for a .407 percentage.

As for the remainder of the season, the Bruins do not expect to see the tough competition that they faced early in the season. Future difficult match-ups include USC on Tuesday, October 11th; BYU at the National Invitational Volleyball Tournament at Pauley Pavilion; a second match with Pac-10 defending champ Stanford; and the University of Pacific.

Aside from remaining healthy, the biggest task that is ahead for UCLA volleyball is to continue to play together. As assistant coach Greg Giovanazzi suggests, the biggest obstacle left for the Bruins is to continue to improve. With other teams constantly gunning to beat the nation's top-ranked team, UCLA is continually threatened by teams that play beyond expectation, since the additional motivational factors are present.

The last time that the University of Arizona Wildcats defeated the UCLA Bruins in women's volleyball was 1983. Out of 21 meetings between the two teams, UCLA had won 19 and lost twice, once at home and once at Arizona's McKale Center. It was clear to all the participants in last Saturday's match-up, players, coaches, fans and sportswriters alike, that the nation's top-ranked Bruins were going to beat the 17th-ranked Wildcats. The question that remained was, "How long would it take?" ASU, the night before, lasted just over an hour and 20 minutes.

Despite attracting the largest crowd in Arizona women's volleyball history (1226), the Wildcats fared even worse than their cross-state rivals, lasting only one hour and 16 minutes.

The Bruins are now 13-0 overall and 6-0 in Pac-10 conference play.

Arizona fell to the Bruins in three straight games—15-12, 15-8 and 15-11. All-American middle blocker Daiva Tomkus again led all players on the court, compiling 12 kills for a .478 hitting percentage. Although the Bruins were outblocked by the Wildcats 9-3, the Bruins still managed to outhit Arizona, .263 to .162.

Although the Bruins had a relatively easy time with both Arizona schools, the team will have to get out of its trend of sloppy play in order to defeat cross-town rival USC. The Trojans are currently ranked third in the Pac-10, behind the Stanford Cardinal and the Bruins.

Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski attributes the team's sloppy play as of late to a lack of practice due to illness. To make matters worse, the Bruins will have only one full day of practice before they head into the inner city haven of USC.

Neither have the Trojans played up to par in recent weeks. USC lost to the Wildcats the night before the Bruins walked into Tucson and then struggled the next night with Arizona State.

Senior setter Ann Boyer, on USC's strengths and weaknesses, states that their offense is the Trojans' biggest asset as well as liability. Trojan head coach Chuck Erbe likes to use complicated offensive maneuvers in their offense to confuse the opposing blockers. On a when the Trojans are running this offense well, they are a tough team to beat, according to Boyer. On the otherhand, when the Trojans are struggling with their plays, the complicated offense causes a lot of confusion in their own ranks.

The Bruins will return to home action on Friday and Saturday against the University of Washington and Washington State in Pac-10 match-ups.

The UCLA defense was, at times, smothering and, at times, suspect. Here is a case of the former.

passes, placing him second on the all-time career list. He also became the fifth Bruin quarterback to throw four touchdowns in a game. His 14 touchdowns put him easily in reach of the season record of 21 held by Tom Ramsey.

Wilhelm also had a good day, completing 28 of 48 for 308 yards and three touchdowns, and just one interception. It was only his 10th best showing ever.

The Bruins came out of the chute fast, scoring on their first three possessions. The Bruins drove 80 yards on their first drive, with Aikman hitting his first eight passes, all for first downs. The drive ended on the 16th play, when Aikman, falling backwards as one of his linemen stepped on his foot, threw a perfect eight-yard pass to Corwin Anthony.

Oregon State's "Air Express" took the field quickly and left just as quickly, punting after a running play was stopped for a loss, and Wilhelm misfired on a third and short on his own 25.

UCLA got a great 34-yard punt return from Darryl Henley (who looked like he would go in for six), but thanks to a holding penalty, the Bruins started from their own 25.

Twelve plays later, the Bruins were in the end zone again, this drive capped by a 21-yard touchdown pass from Aikman to David Keating.

Oregon State's next drive could have been set to circus music. After Kirk Maggio's kickoff, Robb Thomas collided with a teammate and fell forward for a yard on his own five. Tailback Brian Taylor rushed for no gain, Wilhelm scrambled for a yard and then got sacked for a two-yard loss.

Five plays and 68 yards later, Eric Ball strolled into the end zone from the Beaver 12, after Reggie Moore had hauled in a 21-yard pass two plays earlier.

"UCLA always seems to start fast, and they didn't allow us to get going early," said OSU head coach Dave Kragthorpe.

"It didn't seem like we had any spark at the beginning. I was very disappointed with our play in the first quarter. I was pleased with the way we came back, though."

And come back they did.

Down 21-0 after three drives and one quarter and change, most teams would have folded like a road map. However, Oregon State showed why Erik Wilhelm is grabbing all those Pac-10 passing records. Taking the ball on the OSU 10, Wilhelm orchestrated a lightning- quick strike, going 90 yards in seven plays, punctuated by a 69- yard bomb to his fullback Pat Chafable to control the UCLA hole men throughout the quarter, while Bruin shooters were unable to find the net.

In the second quarter, UCLA came out with a vengeance, as senior Hank Peterson scored during a Bruin power play and on a four-meter penalty shot, to tie the score. USC charged back 34 seconds later, when Steve Schroeder scored for the second time in the game to put the Trojans up, 4-3. His goal set the stage for the back-and-forth battle that was to follow, as the score fluctuated between a tie and a USC lead 13 times during the match.

Senior Fernando Carsalade tied the score at four with 2:21 in the second, only for Southern Cal to counter with a goal of their own by their star Giacomo Rossi on a penalty shot. The Bruins knotted the contest at five on a goal by sophomore Javier Escobar, only to have the Trojans score again to go up 6-5 at the half.

Continuing the seesaw pattern, UCLA tied the score then lost the lead three times during the third quarter. Junior Alex Rousseau chipped in a pair, while Escobar added his second goal of the game, as the Bruins tied the match at six, seven and eight apiece, only to watch USC score within 30 seconds of each UCLA goal. SC's Robert Lynn scored twice in the quarter, as the Trojans led 9-8 going into the final frame.

After three quarters dominated by the two offenses, the fourth quarter ended up being a defensive battle, as each team could only tally once. The Trojans took their first two-goal advantage since the first period on Berty's second goal of the game at 3:32 of the quarter during a USC power play. The Bruins, refusing to pack it in, came back on leading goal scorer Peterson's third goal of the match to make it 10-9 with 2:46 remaining.

The final two minutes were marked by inspired play on both sides. UCLA was unable to convert many crucial chances throughout the game, but especially in the fourth, when it capitalized on only one of four power play opportunities. The last one came late in the game, when a Peterson shot was barely stopped by Trojan goalie Brent Kimball with less than 10 seconds remaining, shutting the door on any Bruin hopes.

The loss dropped UCLA to 16-1, putting their No. 1 ranking in jeopardy, while USC raised its record to 10-3.

"SC played very good. . .we had our opportunities, but we did not come through," said Bruin head coach Bob Horn.

"These guys (UCLA) are fighters, they'll bounce back," said Horn.

Harriers harried by heat, but finish first anyway

Women go extra mile, men coast

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

The UCLA women's cross country team went the extra mile—almost literally—Saturday in winning the Cal State Northridge Matador Invitational.

Coaches at the meet, including Bruin head coach Bob Messina, generally agreed that the run around the CSUN campus was longer than the standard 5,000 meters. "The course was incredibly long," Messina said. "It was a good half mile too long. It was not a 5K."

Those unexpected couple hundred meters took their toll on both the athletes' times and—in the late afternoon heat— their bodies. The Bruins, however, were able to outrun all the adversity and earn first place, finishing all six runners in the top 26.

UCLA totaled 52 points (the sum of the placings of the top five runners), while United States International University tallied 82. Host CSUN finished third with 86 points.

While the varsity runners continued their training for the more prominent Cal Poly SLO meet this Saturday, Messina's less experienced crew got its chance to shine at CSUN. "We won with basically our third team out there," Messina explained.

Leading the way for UCLA was Kathleen Hopkins, who finished sixth overall. "I was real pleased with her," Messina said of the cross country walk-on athlete.

On the heels of Hopkins was Bruin Nancy Brown. In her first race since Achilles tendon surgery in June, the one-time UCLA stalwart finished a respectable seventh. Messina, however, knows she has room for improvement. "She left her race in her workouts," Messina explained.

Bruin Andrea DellaMonica, generally a 1500-meter track runner, came on in the last half-mile to place 11th. "I think in a couple years she's going to surprise some people," Messina said of the freshman.

Jena Haggenmiller "closed real well" according to Messina. She placed 12th for UCLA. Bruin Laura Andeen also finished strongly, coming in 16th, Marissa Gardella placed 18th and Debbie Phillips crossed the line 26th.

Slyvia Mosqueda, who graduated from CSULA as the NCAA 10,000-meter champ, won the Matador Invitational with a time of 18:46, accenting the fact that the CSUN course was unusually long. On a standard 5,000-meter course, Mosqueda would have broken the tape near the 16:30 mark.

All things considered, the UCLA men had a simpler day at the Matador Invitational.

There were only two Bruins to keep track of in what head coach Bob Larsen called "a low-key meet."

Redshirt freshman Luigi Gratton, who wasn't even slated to run until Friday, placed 17th, completing the five-and-a-half miles in 30:17. Fellow Bruin Bill Meyer, who stayed with the leaders for the first mile-and-a-half, finished 26th (31:26).

Both Gratton and Meyer, usually 1500-meter track runners, are using the cross country season to get in shape. According to Larsen, however, either one of them could help the Bruins next week.

"We might add one to our group going up to Cal Poly SLO (next week)," Larsen said.

In the end, Bruins too much for OSU

UCLA power finishes off eager Beavers

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

For a couple of brief, shining moments Saturday, Oregon State looked like the class of the Pac-10. There was Erik Wilhelm, the slingin' southpaw throwing deep. Then there was the Beaver defense, putting some serious heat on Troy Aikman, scooping up two fumbles and hauling in two interceptions. On this hot, sunny day in Pasadena, with the score 21-14, it seemed that it could be a day for this traditional conference doormat to shine.

The reality set in, and the UCLA Bruins, obviously suffering from the OSU "blahs" after last weekend's war with Washington, followed Troy Aikman to a 38-21 victory.

The "Aikman Express" outdueled the "Air Express" on Saturday, as the UCLA Heisman candidate completed 24 of 36 for 288 yards and four touchdowns. Aikman now has 14 touchdowns for the season. Aikman overcame four sacks and two interceptions forced by the ferocious Beaver rush.

"It was really a combination of things," Aikman said. "I didn't handle the pressure, the offensive line wasn't doing that great a job. You can't really blame anyone. It is a team effort. We had a lot of breakdowns."

Aikman's four touchdowns give him 31 career touchdown

Wahler out

Jim Wahler, UCLA's starting nose guard, has been suspended indefinitely by head coach Terry Donahue.

Donahue said the disciplinary action was taken because of remarks made by Wahler to Jerry Crowe of the Los Angeles Times. The subject of the remarks involved Wahler's displeasure with his switch from tackle to nose guard and some rather harsh comments regarding USC football and the annual game between the two schools.

"Jim Wahler has been suspended for an indefinite period because of a violation of team rules," said Donahue after UCLA's 38-21 win over OSU.

"He'll return when he is able to demonstrate that he understands team rules and can adhere to them."

NANCEE LeNORMAND/Daily Bruin

Reggie Moore and the UCLA football team finally broke loose from the Oregon State Beavers in Saturday's conference game. The Bruins won, 38-21, to raise their overall record to 5-0, 2-0 in Pac-10 play.

Offensive line not up to par

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

"An offensive lineman stepped on my foot."

That was Troy Aikman's explanation of his stumbling touchdown pass to Corwin Anthony in the first quarter of Saturday's forgettable 38-21 victory over Oregon State.

Aikman's comment in some ways typified the play of the Bruin offensive line against the Beavers. Although the line was very effective during the ground attack, when UCLA went to the air, the question marks began to surface.

As was often the case last week in Washington, Aikman found himself hurrying to throw or not getting the chance to release at all. The Beavers picked off a pair of Aikman passes and sacked him three times, causing two fumbles in the process. Overall, the statistics display a respectable showing by the offense: 181 yards on the ground and 288 in the air. The Bruins have been up near the top of the Pac-10 in every offensive

Game plan pays off for soccer

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

The game plan for UCLA's 1-0 soccer victory over Stanford was best summed up in five words on the lockerroom chalkboard: tenacity, effort and tactical awareness.

The tenacity showed most in the opening and closing segments of the contest, especially when the Bruins began to play shorthanded on a warm Bay Area afternoon.

"We overcame a lot to win this game," explained UCLA coach Sigi Schmid. "Losing Dana (Keir) and Steve Black (to injury) was tough; we had to play guys who weren't in the flow of the game right away. Then, when Mike Lapper was ejected (for rough play at 77:00), we overcame a man-down situation. We won today on effort."

As for tactical awareness—that made itself known really early.

Only 2:30 into the contest, Black sent a ball through two Stanford defenders to Billy Thompson, just outside the Cardinal penalty box. Despite being fouled on a desperation lunge, Thompson hammered a shot past Chris Helling for the game-winner.

"That was in the early plan—to get the ball ahead to Billy or Ray Fernandez," explained Black, who left when an ankle injury in the second half. "They are two quick guys, especially on the turf, so we knew if we could get the ball to their feet, they could be dangerous. That's how we tried to play in the first 25 minutes."

UCLA did dominate that portion of the match, but it was Stanford's turn to pummel the goal for the remainder of the half.

The Cardinal tried a flurry of high crosses and shots to beat Anton Nistl, but time and time again Stanford was turned away.

"They did try to beat me in the air, just like Fresno did last week. But I feel more confident when they try that, especially on the turf," said Nistl.

Nistl was tested the most by Cardinal leading scorer Rhett Hardy, who had five solid chances—including one set up by a Bruin error—to tie the game.

A poor back pass went right to Hardy, but Nistl came out to a shot wide right—one of the few lackluster plays made on a

TEMPE—One word that can accurately describe the UCLA women's volleyball team over the past three seasons is "streak." Since the last Bruin appearance in the Final Four in 1985, Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski has seen nothing but streaks of wins stopped by unexpected losses, streaks of consistent play interrupted by lapses in concentration and streaks of aggressiveness cut down by injuries to key starters.

Now the Bruins seem on the way to a season-long streak: one of victories. The Bruins, with their win over Arizona State last Friday in Tempe, now have a 12-0 record, their best start since 1983, when the team won 20 straight before falling to Hawaii. As most members of the team believe, this streak could last all the way through the season and into the national championship. Sophomore outside hitter Samantha Shaver even suggested that the Bruins are "unbeatable" on the condition that the team continues to play together.

Judging from the massive obstacles that the team has already overcome, an undefeated season does not seem all that inconceivable. Although ranked

Water polo falls to Trojans, 10-9

By Todd Williams

"They're a monkey on our back." That was the predominant sentiment among the UCLA fans after the UCLA-USC water polo game Saturday. The Bruins lost to the Trojans for the fifth consecutive time and suffered their first loss this year in a 10-9 thriller at USC.

A huge, vocal crowd showed up for the match, which fell on homecoming Saturday, looking for an upset over the No. 1 ranked 16-0 UCLA. After a one-hour delay due to a building dedication ceremony, the Trojans got off to a quick start, as senior Zoltan Berty put Southern Cal ahead, 1-0, at 4:35 of the first quarter. The Bruins tied things up on a nice lob shot by Marcelo Carsalde only 27 seconds later, but USC fired back quickly to go up 3-1 by halftime. The Trojans were

Victim evades acid attack in robbery attempt

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

A Pi Beta Phi sorority housemother who narrowly escaped injury in an acid attack Sunday evening said her assailants harassed her a day before in a Beverly Hills parking garage.

Patricia Dowie said two men tried to rob her at 7:30 p.m. Sunday as she stepped out of her car, which was parked in the Pi Beta Phi driveway at 700 Hilgard Avenue.

Dowie had just returned from a shopping center in Beverly Hills, where she saw the two men a day before. Dowie thinks they followed her home from the shopping center to steal her watch.

"They knew about the watch," Dowie said. "It was on their shopping list."

Dowie said she was wearing her Rolex on both days she visited the shopping center. In their attempt to wrestle it away from Dowie, the two men broke the watch into five pieces, she said.

Acid thrown in her face

According to reports from UC Police Department, one man grabbed Dowie's wrists in an attempt to steal her watch, while the other man threw an unknown caustic liquid at her face.

Dowie held onto her watch and ducked the acid, which splattered across her parked car.

When she screamed for help, the attackers ran across the street and jumped into a getaway car,

Preparations for debate hastened

Workers outfit Pauley Pavilion for media event

Intense preparations began on campus Friday morning for this Thursday's presidential debate in Pauley Pavilion, the second and last debate of the 1988 campaign.

"We had four years to plan for the Olympics, four months to plan for the royal visit and four days to plan for the debate," said John Sandbrook, executive assistant chancellor at UCLA.

In an interview with the Daily Bruin yesterday, Sandbrook predicted a hectic schedule as well as much excitement for the UCLA community during the next few days.

"All of the major networks will be here, and they are tentatively planning to broadcast their morning and evening newscasts from Pauley Pavilion," he said.

General Telephone and Electric has already begun setting up the telephone cables at Pauley Pavlion needed for the event, and the stage from which the candidates will speak is under construction.

Sandbrook indicated that "we have to (have the Pavilion) functional by Wednesday afternoon" and explained the layout for the Pavilion during the debate.

"Pauley Pavilion will be turned into a giant TV studio as opposed to having this be a major spectator event. Several hundred press members will be at one end, and each network will have a temporary facility at the east end facing the stage," he said.

"Political history shows that debates are often remembered by their geographical locations. Perhaps this second debate of the 1988 campaign will be remembered always as the 'UCLA Debate.'"

The Secret Service will close the Pavilion and parts of the central campus will be closed Thursday, Sandbrook said. "We'll try to keep pedestrian movement going, but some closure will take place. Parking will be affected in Lots 6 and 8 as well."

At press time, the specifics of the temporary inconveniences had not been determined.

UCLA was chosen, Sandbrook believes, largely because of the facilities adjacent to the Pavilion.

Kelly McGillis talks about 'The Accused'

'Happy' with career so far

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

Kelly McGillis holds a special affinity for her latest role as Assistant District Attorney Katheryn Murphy in The Accused (opens Friday), a movie about a young woman who is violently gang-raped on a pinball machine as a crowd of cheering, clapping men look on.

"I did this movie for a lot of reasons. I think the primary reason is because I myself was raped in 1982 by two men," McGillis said. "When we first discussed doing the film, it was up for grabs which part I wanted to do, and I chose to do Katheryn. I think for me she was the far more difficult woman to create.

"Certainly, having been a rape victim, to do Sarah wouldn't really be . . . I mean I did that, in life. I don't really believe in using my work as therapy."

In the film, McGillis' character is assigned to prosecute the case of Sarah Tobias, played by Jodi Foster. Desensitized to the brutality of people she prosecutes, solely concerned with winning, Murphy treats Sarah's case as routine. But Sarah's plight eventually affects her deeply and gives Murphy new inspiration as a lawyer.

"Katheryn is a character that really makes a journey in this movie, as a person," McGillis said. "This young girl comes into this woman's life as a number, and goes out as a human being."

Different role

For McGillis, the role was an opportunity to move beyond playing girlfriend to some of Hollywood's most desirable leading men: Harrison Ford in Witness and Tom Cruise in Top Gun. "It was the first time that I

Clarification

In Friday's Bruin, an article headlined "Student group's funds cut" quoted Marcos Arvizu, Undergraduate Students Association Council Finance Committee chair, as saying USAC's deficit could not be determined because "the books for the '87-88 year have not been closed." He estimated that the deficit runs as high as $70,000. This estimate, however, does not include figures for the 1987-88 year — the deficit estimate is from previous years.

Bruce Willis appeared last night in Westwood as part of "The Star Spangled Caravan," a celebrity tour organized to get Democrats registered.

Willis moonlights as voting recruiter

Appearance part of celebrity tour to register Democrats

By Marlene Casillas
Staff Writer

Bruce Willis, star of TV's Moonlighting, surprised moviegoers and pedestrians in Westwood Sunday night with his effort to recruit Democratic voters before today's voter registration deadline.

Willis strolled down Broxton Avenue amidst hoards of camera crews, fans and a few hecklers to a table in front of the Croissant Show, a pastry shop, where he signed-up unregistered voters with the help of the Bruin Democrats. Moon-Unit Zappa, musician Frank Zappa's daughter, also visited Westwood to register voters.

The two celebrities are members of "A Star Spangled Caravan," a traveling group of 50 celebrities pushing the Democratic ticket this past weekend.

Willis said he supports Democratic Presidential candidate Michael Dukakis and hopes to influence people to vote democratic.

California Campaign '88, a statewide organization dedicated to electing Dukakis and other Democratic candidates, sponsored the caravan's three-day West Coast tour. The tour targeted Washington, Oregon and California because they are the key states that Democrats must win to achieve a November victory, said Jay Ziegler, deputy press secretary for Campaign '88.

More than 40 volunteers from the Bruin Democrats distributed flyers urging people to "Get registered to vote by Cher and other celebrities."

Actresses Cher, Morgan Fairchild and actor Rob Lowe are also members of the caravan, but only Willis and Zappa came to Westwood.

An enthusiastic crowd chanted "We like Mike!" and shook "Dukakis '88" signs while waiting for the stars. Willis' arrival created enormous excitement, although anxious fans expressed disappointment about the absence of Cher and other famous personalities.

The Westwood stop was a last-minute addition to the tour, Ziegler said. Security problems prevented the other stars from joining Willis and Zappa.

Bruin Democrats hoped the event would help to convince undecided voters to support Dukakis, said Laura Salomone, a Bruin Democrat.

"We also hope that student encouragement will cure the apathy young people feel toward voting," she said.

One lone Republican stood firm in the plethora of Democrats gathered outside the Mann

Today last day to register to vote

Today is the last day to register to vote for the Nov. 8 election. Unregistered voters can sign up at several UCLA locations.

Two student political groups, the Bruin Republicans and the Bruin Democrats, are scheduled to have registration tables on Bruin Walk today from approximately 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Paul Tweeten, a private citizen, will continue to register people in front of Ackerman Union from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Tweeten, who does not represent any political group, has been registering UCLA community members for eight days. He estimated that he had registered about 2,000 voters.

People are often "self-conscious" about registering and may feel "put-off or apathetic," Tweeten said, while handing out registration forms and answering voters' questions.

"Voting is not only a right, but a responsibility," Tweeten said.

Bruin Republicans member Heidi Faulkner said the excitement of a presidential election is attracting more people to exercise their voting responsibility. More people are registering this year than last year, she said.

She urged students who have recently moved to the L.A. area to remember to re-register, as required by law.

Asian Pacific alumni group forms at UCLA

By May Wong
Staff Writer

A new volunteer service group of the growing UCLA Council of Support Organizations will provide an opportunity for Asian Pacific alumni and friends to contribute to the university, group organizers said.

The Asian Pacific Alumni of UCLA (APA-UCLA), the most recently recognized group of the Council, held its inaugural reception at the James E. West Center Sunday. The council, under the Alumni Association, provides the university with support services such as scholarships and career information for students.

The formation of APA-UCLA, officially recognized in May, was "long past due," said KCBS news anchor Tritia Toyota, the host of the reception.

With 18,000 UCLA graduates and 22 percent of the current student body represented by those of Asian Pacific ancestry, the main goal of APA-UCLA is to provide "a more physical presence of Asian-Pacifics concerned with every aspect of the university — from cultural events to admission policy," said Superior Court Judge Ernest Hiroshige, president of APA-UCLA.

The group hopes to "involve people that weren't involved before . . . and take those people to be educated on what is going on campus . . . so they could be in a role to be mobilized to help," said John Kobara, executive director of the UCLA Alumni Association.

Although rumblings for a need to form such a group began much earlier, it was not until Toyota, a 1970 UCLA graduate, telephoned Kobara before substantial efforts began.

Barely settled into his newly acquired job as executive director in 1987, Kobara received a call with this message from Toyota: "I don't do anything for UCLA because UCLA doesn't do anything for Asians, and until you guys do something for Asians, I'm not going to help you guys," Kobara reminisced.

Before an audience of 200 at the reception, Chancellor Charles Young said the collective voice of the Asian-Pacifics "will be heard and will play a role in setting the agenda for the 21st century." Young was one of the reception's featured guests along

Alumnus' wheels of fortune

UCLA grad finds ad opportunities on America's roads

By David Mori, Staff Writer

UCLA alumnus, entrepreneur and self-proclaimed capitalist Ric Flores is not afraid to admit his desire for money.

He hopes his newly formed company, Mobile Advertising, will allow him to travel the road to riches.

And if last December is any indication of the future of Mobile Advertising, then the 1987 alumnus from UCLA's political science department may be well on his way.

Last December, Flores said he convinced Glenn Toth, associate athletic director for Intercollegiate Athletics and Marketing Department, to let his company do advertising for the UCLA football team.

Impressed with the concept of the Mobile Ad, which consists of attaching billboards to contracted trucks, Toth agreed.

Flores said the idea came while negotiating through traffic on the 405 freeway back when he was a junior at UCLA. Surrounded by 18-wheelers with nothing on the sides, he could not understand why the owners of the trucks did not advertise their services.

He then had the idea of renting the space and doing his own advertising on the sides of trucks.

Ric Flores

Not wanting anyone to steal what he thought was an original idea, Flores kept it quiet. "I didn't tell anyone," he said. "I also needed time and resources."

Flores did some research prior to graduation. He talked with people from several advertising agencies, telling them he was doing research for a student project. "I learned that mobile advertising was not a completely new idea. Others tried and failed," he said.

But motivated by seeing others his age making money the way they wanted, Flores contacted friend David Lapkin and they both worked to hopefully make the business venture a success.

"Everything I've done, I've succeeded," Flores said. "I've never fallen so hard that I haven't been able to get up again.

Flores also figured taking a risk would help him in that should it fail, he would learn from the experience. "This was a tremendous opportunity. If I didn't do it, I would have nothing to gain," he said.

The gains began to appear, however. Three months after graduation, he landed his first client, the UCLA football team.

Although Flores' rates range from roughly $500 to $900 monthly, he claims the amount the football team pays him is "on the low end of the scale."

Although he admits he is hardly a millionaire, Flores said that he has learned several lessons from his experiences.

"You have to be able to shrug off nos" from potential clients he said. Flores said that he learned he was no longer doing the "littler stuff" he did in college and expected rejection.

Determination is another key factor in succeeding, according

Smoke forces evacuation of Kerckhoff

The Kerckhoff Coffee House was evacuated at approximately 5:30 p.m. yesterday when smoke was seen coming out of the air vents. After a burnt fluorescent light and not a fire was determined as the cause of the smoke, the facility returned to normal operations at 6:00 p.m.

Coffee house workers said they noticed the smell of burnt wires at 5:00 p.m. Approximately 40 customers were asked to leave when the smoke appeared.

A technician from the Central Steam Plant identified the source by its odor.

The smoke was drawn to the coffee house through the venting system, he said. This is an everyday incident at UCLA, the technician added.

Emergency measures taken in Yugoslavia but unrest continues

By Alison Smale, Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Communist authorities put more police on the streets and imposed unspecified "urgent measures" in Montenegro's capital Monday, but protests fed by economic crisis and ethnic tension did not stop.

Protest has swept much of southern and eastern Yugoslavia in recent weeks. Police used violent tactics for the first time over the weekend to disperse Montenegrin students and workers demanding the dismissal of local Communist Party leaders.

President Raif Dizdarevic went on national television Sunday night to appeal for calm, warning of unspecified emergency measures.

Unrest continued Monday in Titograd, the capital of Montenegro 280 miles southwest of Belgrade, and the regional party leadership held an emergency meeting, the official news agency Tanjug reported.

Workers and 2,000 students at Niksic, 30 miles north of Titograd, rallied outside a government building and in a steel mill where 2,800 workers were on strike for a second day, Tanjug said.

Police used clubs and tear gas to break up weekend crowds in Titograd and disperse marchers in Niksic who were on their way there.

The Titograd rally was an explosion of anger about hardships resulting from the austerity program the government imposed in May because of a $21 billion foreign debt and high inflation, which has soared to an annual rate of 217 percent. The unemployment rate is about 15 percent.

Concern for Montenegrins in southern Serbia's troubled Kosovo province, where Serbs and Montenegrins are a minority to ethnic Albanians, also has stirred passions.

At least 200 killed in Algeria

Army routs rioters amid economic crisis

By Rachid Khiari, Associated Press

ALGIERS, Algeria — Soldiers shot protesters and army helicopters buzzed riot areas to quell unrest that killed at least 200 in coastal, desert and mountain areas hit hard by high unemployment and spiraling prices.

President Chadli Bendjedid prepared to address the nation tonight while the country remained under a state of emergency and a nighttime curfew was in effect in the capital, Algiers. Observers said he would likely appeal for calm in his noon message.

They suggested he could buttress this appeal by addressing the economic crisis which triggered the violence Tuesday — the worst in this North African nation since its independence from France in 1962.

Unrest hit the western port city of Oran to Annaba in the east. Rioting also was reported in a dozen provincial centers, including in the southern desert, said Interior Minister El Hadi Khediri, appearing on state television over the weekend.

"We have tried in vain to stop the troubles," Khediri said.

In Algiers, where the violence started, clashes between the army and rioters spread late Saturday and early Sunday as protesters defied a 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew and a ban on demonstrations.

Only brief volleys of gunfire were heard early today.

Kouba, on the southern fringes of Algiers, apparently suffered the largest number of casualties. Hospital sources reported more than 60 people killed when the army, according to witnesses, fired into a crowd after it repeatedly ignored calls

Chile's Pinochet to stay despite defeat

By Eduardo Gallardo
Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile — President Augusto Pinochet acknowledged defeat in a referendum on extending his rule but again rejected opposition demands for his resignation and vowed to stay in power for another 18 months.

A key opposition leader, meanwhile, was quoted Sunday as calling for talks with the military government on the nation's political future.

In a surprise television appearance from his country home at Bucalemu, Gen. Pinochet said Sunday, "I acknowledge the opposition's victory, but I am not going to change what the constitution says. March 11, 1990, is going to be the day that the government is handed over.

"The situation is very simple," he said. "We fulfilled the constitution that was set up . . . so now that the opposition has triumphed, why should we change?"

The comments of the 72-year-old commander-in-chief of Chile's armed forces came during a three-minute TV newscast. Pinochet was dressed in a short-sleeve blue shirt. He appeared relaxed and spoke clearly and firmly.

Nearly 7 million Chileans went to the polls Wednesday to vote on the armed forces' pro-

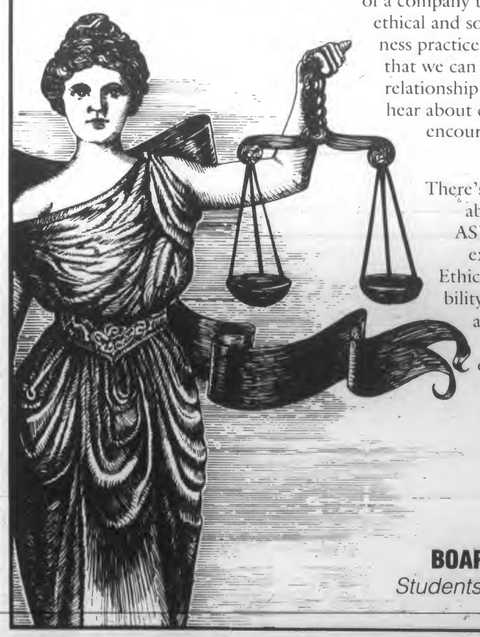
HELP US CHANGE THE WORLD

ASUCLA thinks business should have a conscience. Over the years, we've tried to be a force for positive social change, to take stands that reflect the ethical values of our campus community.

In 1974, ASUCLA boycotted non-Union lettuce in support of the United Farm Workers. In 1979, ASUCLA supported the Nestle's boycott, in protest of the way Nestle's marketed baby formula in Third World countries. In 1981, ASUCLA changed its banking policies to use only "clean" banks, financial institutions with no ties to apartheid South Africa. Last Spring, ASUCLA voted to deposit funds with a Chicago bank that pioneered a loan program for low-income people in its neighborhood.

We know there's more we could do. But we need your help. If you're aware of a company that does not adhere to ethical and socially responsible business practices, we'd like to know so that we can scrutinize our business relationship. Similarly, we'd like to hear about companies that deserve encouragement and praise for their high standards.



There's complete information about providing input to ASUCLA in our brochure explaining our Policy on Ethical and Social Responsibility. Please pick-up a copy at the Ackerman Union information desk or other campus locations — just look for the cover design shown at left. And thank you!

O-rings not damaged during last mission

Rocket boosters pass test as shuttle Discovery prepares for Feb. 18 launch

By Howard Benedict
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — O-ring seals in the joints of space shuttle Discovery's left booster rocket suffered no damage during last month's launch, NASA reported Monday as workers began disassembling the right booster.

The shuttle Challenger was destroyed and its crew of seven lost on Jan. 28, 1986, when superhot gas and flames burned through the synthetic rubber O-rings in a faulty joint in one of its boosters.

Discovery's Sept. 28 launch was the first since the accident, and its two solid fuel rockets burned for two minutes as planned and then parachuted into the Atlantic Ocean, where they were recovered and returned to the Kennedy Space Center for inspection.

Officials reported earlier that an initial inspection after recovery indicated the rockets were in excellent condition.

Ed Medal, a spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., reported late Monday that engineers had completed dismantled both booster rockets.

"All six field joints were taken apart and looked at," he said. "Everything looks great. There was no evidence of hot gas or heat on any of the O-rings. The new bonded installation did its job."

There are numerous joints in each of the 149-foot-tall rockets. Each joint has three O-rings.

He said new insulation added to the joint area also worked as intended in keeping burning gases away from the rings.

On Challenger, each joint had two O-rings. In redesigning the rocket, engineers at the Marshall center and at Morton Thiokol, the manufacturer, added a third O-ring as part of a metal lip, called a capture feature, intended to prevent joint movement under pressure of ignition.

Discovery and its five-man crew landed at Edwards Air Force Base in California on Oct. 3 after a four-day flight during which the astronauts deployed a communications satellite, conducted experiments and tested new orbiter systems.

The shuttle was ferried back to Canaveral on Saturday, riding piggyback atop a Boeing 747 jetliner. It was back at its launch site Monday, being inspected in a processing facility at the Kennedy Space Center.

Discovery's crew will describe their mission at a news conference Tuesday at the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

NASA officials said Discovery returned to Earth in good shape and would require little refurbishment. Once a few protective thermal tiles have been replaced, workers will begin preparing it for its next flight, scheduled Feb. 18, with another communications satellite as the cargo.

Slide show of Alaska mountain to be held

By Wendy Witherspoon, Staff Writer

If UCLA won't go to the mountain, then mountaineering Ranger Roger Robinson will bring the mountain to UCLA.

The Recreational Instruction Program will sponsor a special evening presentation of "The Four Seasons of Denali" scheduled for tomorrow night.

Robinson will give a slide presentation of present-day climbing on several Alaska range peaks. Also included will be scenic slides to music picturing the four seasons of the Denali area.

"Denali," the Indian word meaning "The Great One," is the ancient name for for what is better known as Mt. McKinley. This 20,320-foot mountain, the highest peak in North America, lies within 200 miles of the Arctic Circle, at the core of Denali National Park.

Among mountaineers, Denali is known to be the harshest peak in the world to climb, with violent winds gusting to more than 100 miles per hour. Nevertheless, this polar, windswept peak lures over 700 climbers attempting to scale to its summit each year.

Roger and Pam Robinson live year-round near the community of Talkeetna, Alaska. Roger has worked seven years for Denali National Park. Pam works for Lowell Thomas Jr.'s Talkeetna Air Taxi. Roger is also a professional photographer and his work has appeared in Alaska magazine and other periodicals.

The presentation will be from 6 to 8 p.m. in the Los Angeles Tennis Center Clubhouse. This multi-media presentation is open to everyone interested in mountaineering or the outdoors. Admission is free at the door.

CARTOON SUBMISSIONS WELCOMED: Cartoons, as well as letters, may be submitted to the Daily Bruin. Please leave them in the box on the receptionists' desk in 112 Kerckhoff Hall. Artists should give their full name, major, home/work phone number, and reg. card number in addition to their cartoon(s).

Communications club not just for women

By Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

The UCLA Women in Communications Incorporated (WICI) club is looking for a few good men.

"I think the name scares them off," said WICI President Amy Stroud, explaining that the name does not exclude men from joining. "We're trying to educate people about different career options they have in communications and I'm sure there are plenty of men interested in that."

Stroud said that several men serve on the national WICI board, and that the name is not meant as a form of "reverse discrimination."

"After a hundred years an organization builds up a reputation," she said. "We don't want to start up a whole new club just because of the name."

The WICI club invites professionals from the Los Angeles community in the fields of journalism, broadcasting, public relations, and advertising, among others, to speak at weekly meetings.

Once per quarter the club puts on a "Media Night," which is free and open to the public. This year keynote speakers will include the vice-president of an advertising company, an Emmy award-winning actress/producer and possibly a record-company executive.

Founded in 1909, WICI is one of the nation's oldest and largest professional organizations and has a network of 10,500 members. It was conceived "in the days when there were few women in communication" as a support group, said Stroud. Its goals include working for First Amendment rights, recognizing distinguished professional development as well as promoting the advancement and equitable treatment of women in communications.

Stroud said that the priorities of the UCLA club are to inform members about careers in communications and allow them a chance to meet professionals in various fields.

"A lot of people going to UCLA don't know what they want to do," she said. "Sometimes somebody says that they want to go into advertising, and when I ask, 'Creative or selling?' — They don't know."

"The Comm major is so confusing — a lot of times people just give up," Stroud said. "I want to make it clear to people that you do not need to be in the major to pursue a career in communications."

The first meeting, held tonight at 5 p.m. in Ackerman 2412, will be devoted to signing up new members. Stroud said that dues are $20 if one signs up before Oct. 18,, and $25 after that date. A member must have a 2.5 GPA and "show an interest in communications."

Crime levels up after five-year decline

By Pete Yost, Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Crime levels rose 1.8 percent last year, the government reported, ending a five-year decline the Reagan administration had attributed partly to vigorous law enforcement and tougher treatment of criminals.

People living in the West were the most likely to have been victims of crime last year, while residents in the Northeast were the least likely to be victimized, said the study by the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

Nationally, the number of personal and household crimes rose about 613,000 in 1987 to more than 34.7 million.

In 1986, the number of crimes hit the lowest level in the 15-year history of the government's national crime survey, 34.1 million.

Even with the increase, crime levels last year were 16 percent lower than in 1981, the peak year with 41.5 million crimes committed, said Joseph Bessette, acting director of the bureau, a Justice Department agency.

Administration officials have suggested that the decline in crime was due to sterner law enforcement and a more cooperative public. Some academic experts analyzing the data have stressed that the size of the most crime-prone age group, those in their mid to late teens, has shrunk in the 1980s.

The crime-prone age group will continue to decline in size until the early 1990s, demographers say, when it is anticipated by many experts that crime levels will take a decisive turn upward once again.

Last year's slight crime increases probably suggest a greater concentration of low-income groups at the young age levels "where crime goes on," said Alfred Blumstein, a dean at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Last year, the number of personal crimes rose nearly 250,000 or 1.4 percent from 1986 to more than 19 million, with increases in all four categories of rape, robbery, theft and assault, which includes murder.

The amount of household crime rose by nearly 360,000 or 2.3 percent to 15.7 million, with increases in burglary, larceny and motor vehicle theft.

In 1987, the number of personal crimes per 1,000 people was 125 in the West, 101 in the Midwest, 91 in the South and 71 in the Northeast. The number of household crimes were 223 in the West, 166 in the Midwest, 179 in the South and 116 in the Northeast.

The West was the only region to show an increase in personal crime last year compared with 1986, up 8.6 percent. In the South it fell by 4.8 percent, while the Northeast and Midwest showed no significant change.

The national crime survey was compiled by questioning some 93,000 people last year in 46,000 homes.

Congress aiming to finish drug, tax bills before adjournment

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Its election-year antennae in full working order, Congress is aiming to finish fashioning a something-for-everyone anti-drug bill and a $2.7 billion tax measure this week and then adjourn for the year.

Both measures would satisfy a compelling urge that overtakes lawmakers each election year: to churn out legislation popular with large numbers of voters.

Work on both, however, is being influenced by another instinct that becomes unusually potent on Capitol Hill late in even-numbered years: the desire to flee Washington in time to campaign for re-election.

Thus, when the Senate turns to the drug measure — possibly on Wednesday — legislators will be struggling to finish their work quickly or going home with no bill at all.

"Ninety-five percent of the good we'll do with this bill is in the core bill," insists one of the sponsors of the drug legislation, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. "If members from both sides continue to insist on the more controversial amendments, we won't get a bill."

The drug bill is a two-year, $2.6 billion collection of programs ranging from an expansion of the availability of treatment programs to a stiffening of penalties for people convicted of distributing drugs to children.

But lawmakers are lining up to offer an assortment of amendments that are so contentious that the bill just might be debated to death.

Senators and their aides spent the long Columbus Day weekend trying to figure out how to slash the number of amendments the chamber will have to sort through, with Republicans ready to offer six to 10 amendments and Democrats poised to introduce more than 70 others.

Among the more controversial amendments are proposals to allow courts to consider illegally gathered evidence that police obtained in good faith; narrow the rights of prisoners to claim they were jailed illegally; require a waiting period for people wishing to purchase handguns and apply tougher sanctions against the apartheid government of South Africa.

An effort may be made to strip from the bill a provision that would allow capital punishment for drug dealers who order killings, for hired killers who commit murder as part of a drug enterprise and for anyone who kills a law enforcement officer during the commission of a drug crime.

One matter the measure skirts is where the money will come from for the very programs the bill would create.

Although $1.4 billion of the legislation's spending would be expected to occur over the next 12 months, lawmakers say the government right now can only scrape together $450 million. The Senate has so far voted down efforts to raise some taxes and to cut other federal programs to provide the extra money.

Even if the Senate finishes its work, the House and Senate will have to agree on an identical bill before they can send it to President Reagan for his signature. The House passed a drug measure on Sept. 22 that provides the government with tough weapons against drug dealers and users, including the death penalty.

Image experts look at Dukakis' likability

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When political filmmaker Charles Guggenheim was asked to list the qualities that Democrat Michael Dukakis projects in this presidential campaign, he responded with this: "controlled, efficient, knowledgeable, predictable, humorless."

What about likable?

"No, I don't think likable is one of them," he said.

Is that a problem?

"Oh, it's a serious problem."

Guggenheim, whose career dates back to his service as Democratic candidate Adlai Stevenson's television consultant in the 1950s, expresses a widespread view that Dukakis has a serious image problem which his TV campaign commercials are doing very little to dispel.

"The smartest clerk in the world," was how ABC's Peter Jennings, a panelist for the first presidential debate last month, described the Massachusetts governor to preface a question about his passionless, technocratic governing style.

"Passionless?" responded the Democratic nominee with a smile. "I care deeply about people, all people: working people, working families, people all over this country."

But does that concern come across to people who watch Dukakis debating or see him campaigning on TV news broadcasts?

"Dukakis comes across like your accountant or, God forbid, your dentist," said New York media consultant David Garth. "You know you have to see him, but you don't look forward to it."

"He is a very, very conservative guy and he is a very deliberate guy and he has no natural sense of humor," said Garth, noting that Republican nominee George Bush doesn't display much more appeal.

"I don't think there's any warmth or depth of feeling for either one of these guys," Garth said.

Judy Pearson, a professor of interpersonal communication at Ohio University who has written extensively on how women react to presidential candidates, said Dukakis' manner doesn't blend with his message.

Propositions '88

Proposition 83:
Provides $65 million for water pollution control projects.

SACRAMENTO — Proposition 83 would infuse $65 million into a state program to help communities build water reclamation and sewage treatment plants.

As of June, a total of $257 million in grants and loans still remained from four bond measures totaling $1.2 billion that voters have approved for sewage treatment plants in the past 18 years.

But only $36 million was earmarked for sewage treatment plants in California's smallest towns, which the state Water Resources Control Board estimates need a total of $85 million.

And proposed water reclamation projects that total $150 million are competing for $14 million in loans.

Proposition 83 would authorize the state to issue $65 million in general revenue bonds to provide up to $25 million in grants for small town sewage plants and $30 million in loans for water reclamation plants. The state could use up to $10 million to guarantee local bonds measures so communities can borrow cheaper money for their share of sewage treatment facility costs.

"That's what we need to run the machinery for the next two years, until 1990 when we'll need more money," Patty Zwartz, spokeswoman for the Water Resources Control Board, said of the bond measure. ". . . Then the well runs dry."

Proposition 83 bonds would be paid back from the state general fund over a period of 20 years.

An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would add $55 million in interest to the state's potential bill. But because the loans would be repaid, the Legislature's nonpartisan analyst predicts the state's net cost would be $82 million.

Proponents say small towns need the extra help because their per-household costs of sewage treatment are high, making it harder for them to meet state water quality standards.

And the backers say water reclamation projects that treat waste water for re-use for landscaping and industry benefit the entire state in environmental protection and water savings, particularly in times of drought.

"The most effective way found to improve water quality in our streams, lakes and estuaries is to properly treat waste water," said a ballot argument signed by Sen. Henry Mello, D-Watsonville, and Assemblyman Jim Costa, D-Fresno.

But critics raise concerns about the state's growing reliance on bonds. Proposition 83 is part of a record $3.3 billion, nine-measure bond package on the Nov. 8 ballot. The measures follow voters' approval of $2.2 billion in bonds in June.

Moscow reports first Soviet AIDS death

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union has reported its first AIDS death, that of a pregnant prostitute from Leningrad, and authorities may publish her photograph to alert her sexual partners.

The 29-year-old woman died Sept. 5 of pneumonia following a 26-pound weight loss, chronic tonsillitis and bronchitis and a serious decline in the count of her immune system's T-cells, the labor newspaper Trud reported.

All are common symptoms of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and the newspaper noted that epidemiologists were incensed that the woman's doctors failed to diagnose AIDS before she died.

They are now trying to locate the victim's sexual partners to determine who else might be infected with the disease, and authorities are considering publishing the woman's photograph to alert her partners, Trud said.

She was registered as a night school student and as a worker at a factory, but police said she earned her living as a prostitute for foreigners.

Soviet officials say they have identified 83 AIDS carriers but only one person who has developed the deadly disease. However, they say other cases may have been diagnosed incorrectly.

AIDS is caused by a virus that damages the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to infections and cancer.

It is spread most often through sexual contact, needles or syringes shared by drug abusers, infected blood or blood products, and from pregnant women to their offspring.

Two men seeking custody of child

Both claim fatherhood, appeal to Supreme Court for decision

By Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

Two men claiming fatherhood of a 7-year-old girl are asking the U.S. Supreme Court for a Solomon-like decision which could affect other fathers in so-called reverse paternity cases.

"This case arises out of a societal phenomenon of men assuming the responsibility we've always told them to assume as parents," says attorney Larry Hoffman. The case is scheduled to be heard Tuesday by the high court.

In the classic paternity case, a man who denies fathering a child out of wedlock may be forced by the courts to take financial responsibility for the child.

"I consider this a double reverse paternity case," Hoffman says. "We get two men coming forward wanting to support and care for this child."

'I consider this a double reverse paternity case . . . We get two men coming forward wanting to support and care for this child.'

— Attorney Larry Hoffman

Hoffman represents a married couple, Gerald and Carole Dearing, who are fighting a suit by Michael Hirschensohn, Dearing's former lover.

Hirschensohn, who says he is the biological father of Victoria Dearing, wants visitation rights and "the opportunity to be involved in the child's life," says his attorney, Joel Aaronson.

"All he wants is to be able to visit with the child and give the child the warmth and nurturing a parent gives a child," says Aaronson.

The problem is a California law which mirrors similar statutes in other states. It holds that a woman's legal husband, unless he is impotent or sterile, is the father of any child born during the marriage.

Aaronson says the law is outdated and unfair and wants the Supreme Court to overrule it.

The lawyer notes the increasing role of stepfathers and stepmothers in the lives of children of divorce and says Victoria would not be unique among her classmates if she was sharing her time with two fathers.

The events which created this legal triangle reflect the complexities of life in the 1980s. The facts acknowledged by both lawyers are these: Gerald and Carole Dearing were married in 1976. There were separations, and from 1978 to 1984 Dearing had an intermittent sexual affair with Hirschensohn in Los Angeles and St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands.

In September 1980, Dearing became pregnant. Her husband attended Lamaze classes with her and was present in the delivery room when the baby was born by Caesarean section on May 11, 1981.

"Gerald was the proudest of fathers. . .," his lawyer's brief states.

But Hirschensohn says Dearing told him soon after the baby's birth that the infant probably was his.

Just after Victoria's first birthday, Dearing, the U.S. representative of a French oil company, was transferred from Los Angeles to New York. His wife and daughter stayed behind.

Dearing, Hirschensohn and the child then had blood tests which showed a 98.07 percent probability that Hirschensohn was the father. Dearing has not had a blood test and his lawyer claims it is irrelevant because the law says he is the father. In the fall of 1982, Hirschensohn sued to be named Victoria's legal father.

There were upheavals in the Dearing marriage, and Dearing and Victoria lived with Hirschensohn intermittently until April 1984, when she accused him of "peculiar behavior" and obtained a restraining order to keep him away from the little girl. That June, she reconciled with her husband in New York.

Since then, Hoffman said, the Dearings have had another child and a third baby is due any day.

Hirschensohn, a businessman who divides his time between St. Thomas and Los Angeles, has not seen Victoria again except for one brief visit in 1986.

Appeals courts in California have ruled against Hirschensohn, upholding a law they say was designed to protect the integrity of the family.

Soviet Pacific fleet begins naval exercise

The Associated Press

TOKYO — A Japanese anti-submarine patrol plane saw two Soviet missile destroyers sailing northward in the Sea of Japan on Monday, indicating the Soviet Pacific Fleet has begun its fall naval exercise, a Defense Agency spokesman said.

The "Udaloy"-class destroyers were seen about 120 miles west of the tip of Shakotan Peninsula on Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, said Lt. Cmdr. Yutaka Nojima, an agency spokesman.

On Sunday, five Soviet warships were seen by a Japanese patrol plane off nearby Rebun Island, Nojima said.

Last year, the Soviet Union mobilized more than 20 military vessels in its fall exercise, conducted for about a week, he said.

Bush, Dukakis court Italian-Americans, prepare for debate

By David Espo
Associated Press

It was a day that mixed campaign rhetoric with colorful made-for-television images

George Bush and Michael Dukakis courted the support of Italian-Americans in competing Columbus Day appearances Monday that left plenty of time to polish their lines in private for this week's second and final presidential campaign debate.

It was a day that mixed campaign rhetoric with colorful made-for-television images. Dukakis proposed a plan to make it easier for first-time home buyers to finance their residences before marching in a Columbus Day parade up Fifth Avenue in mid-town Manhattan alongside Gov. Mario Cuomo, New York Mayor Ed Koch and John F. Kennedy Jr.

Bush took a turn at a pool table in an Italian neighborhood in New Jersey, bouncing the No. 4 ball in the corner pocket while the morning patrons cheered. After that came a speech on crime.

Their daily campaign rounds over, both men hustled back to their political lairs to resume preparations for their prime-time debate later in the week.

Both camps said they expected the 90-minute debate to be on the campus of UCLA, and the presidential rivals were flying to the West Coast on Tuesday to prepare.

The candidates exuded confidence as they began the final four weeks of campaigning.

The vice president, a step ahead in the polls, said he was heartened by surveys showing him the leader across the South and in other key states.

Countered Dukakis: "This one is out there to be won . . . We can taste it. We can feel it."

Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle was the only vice presidential candidate with appearances scheduled.

He was in Ohio and Michigan, where he offered another refinement of the answer to the question in last week's debate that plagued him — what would he do if he suddenly became president.

He said he would make a request to speak to the nation and would consult with U.S. allies.

"Obviously you do different things under an assassination. The first thing you do in an assassination — I would still say a prayer for myself and the nation — but the first thing you do is you get on the phone and call the head of the CIA and see what he thinks it was. You don't convene a Cabinet meeting right away," Quayle said.

"You get your secretary of defense, your national security adviser, your Secretary of State and meet with them immediately. In the situation of an illness it would be a different type of situation," he said.

Dukakis attacked Bush's record on housing issues in his first stop of the day.

"George Bush has no housing program. He has no solutions," the Democrat said in a speech in Levittown, a Long Island community that was the embodiment of the post-World Wart II boom in affordable housing. "He has no new ideas."

But the vice president got the endorsement of Il Progresso, an Italian-language newspaper, which said the "traditional values of Italian-Americans can be found in the electoral program of Vice President Bush.

Italian-American Cuomo answered for Dukakis, saying, "Then they ought to change their name. From going forward — progresso — to going backward," he said.

The vice president street-campaigned in New Jersey, walking through an Italian neighborhood in south Trenton before delivering a speech on crime.

"Frankly, law-abiding Americans are fed up with the cruel and unusual punishment inflicted on them by those who are soft on crime," the vice president said.

He proposed making it easier for victims to collect civil judgments for restitution and allowing them to receive more money automatically if a convict's financial situation improved.

While refraining from the type of harsh attack on Dukakis' crime record that has become a regular part of his campaigning, Bush criticized "liberal thinkers" who he said "thought it was compassionate to lighten up on sentencing to allow early releases and furloughs."

That was a muted remark directed at the Massachusetts prison furlough program that Bush has repeatedly criticized during the campaign. In one infamous incident, a murderer out of jail on a furlough escaped and brutally attacked a Maryland couple.

Bush told reporters aboard Air Force Two en route to New Jersey that he favors a review of the federal furlough program but said he doesn't have any "specific feelings" in mind. In a jab at Dukakis, he added he wants to make sure the federal program doesn't "slip into the Massachusetts model."

There was nothing muted about Dukakis' attack on Bush in his speech on housing.

The Democratic presidential candidate outlined a plan that he dubbed "Home Start" that would allow first-time home buyers to use their Individual Retirement Account or tax-deferred pension savings for a downpayment on a home. Current law prohibits the use of those funds without payment of deferred taxes and in some cases, a penalty for withdrawal.

Dukakis said his program would also include provisions to lower down payments and closing costs and to raise borrowing limits on federally guaranteed mortgages. He cited no cost and aides were not immediately available to provide details.

"We rolled up our sleeves — Democrats and Republicans alike — and made a great national promise to provide affordable housing for all Americans," the Massachusetts governor said after visiting the home of a Levittown couple.

"The administration that Mr. Bush has been a part of broke that promise in the early 1980s," he said.

Physician discusses wine's effect on body

'Modest amounts' acceptable, may guard against heart attacks

By Jack Schreibman
Associated Press

Marton said studies are inconclusive about the relation between female breast cancer and moderate alcohol intake, but he regards the question of moderate alcohol use and pregnancy a matter of choice, not medicine.

SAN FRANCISCO — Alcohol in "modest amounts" is acceptable for pregnant women and can guard against arterial cholesterol buildup and heart attacks, says the chairman of the Pacific Presbyterian Medical Center's Department of Medicine.

"One or two glasses of wine a day" benefit the body, but "there is clear-cut evidence that shows if you drink lots and lots of alcohol, you die pretty early," Dr. Keith Marton told a meeting last week on the medical effects of wine.

Marton said studies are inconclusive about the relation between female breast cancer and moderate alcohol intake, but he regards the question of moderate alcohol use and pregnancy a matter of choice, not medicine.

At its Chicago headquarters, American Medical Association spokesman Mark Stuart said the AMA could not comment about opinions of individual physicians, but said the organization's policy on alcohol remains unchanged since 1982.

The policy, he said, states that women who drink heavily place their fetus at "substantial risk" for mental and physical impairment that "fetal risk involved in moderate drinking has not been established;" that women should make an informed choice about drinking during prenancy, and physicians should tell their patients that the "safest course" is not to drink.

Marton, author of the book "Medical Decision-Making," said he thought Americans suffer from "information overload," worry excessively about their bodies and are too much "attuned to the fine points of health."

He said Americans, who are "living longer today than ever before," nevertheless "worry about what they eat, what they drink, how much exercise they do, what's in the air, what's in their water — and constantly look for ways to improve their health."

As from the beginning of time, he added, they are "looking for more ways to seek immortality," as they are bombarded with information on "every edible substance."

Japanese buy $8.96 billion of U.S. real estate in eight months

The Associated Press

Japanese investors bought $8.96 billion in American real estate in the first eight months of this year, and Chicago may be displacing Hawaii as the third most popular spot for Japanese buyers, a new study finds.

If purchases continue at the present pace, Japanese investment in U.S. real estate in 1988 should surpass last year's record of $12.77 billion, according to a study released Monday by Kenneth Leventhal & Co., a real estate consulting firm.

The company's third-quarter report, which covers only eight months because September figures were slow in arriving, found California attracted the most yen, $2.48 billion worth, followed by New York state, with $1.5 billion.

Illinois climbed to third place, with $1.34 billion in Japanese purchases, primarily of Chicago commercial buildings. Hawaii, which has consistently placed third in such lists, followed Illinois with $1.2 billion in Japanese investments in the first eight months of 1988.

Far behind were Georgia, notching a 438 percent increase to $700 million in Japanese purchases, and Massachusetts, with $458 million.

Since 1987, when Leventhal began keeping such statistics, Japanese purchases of U.S. real estate have totaled $35.3 billion.

Leventhal's figures tend to be higher than similar tallies by the U.S. Commerce Department, Bank of America and the Salomon Brothers investment firm. In part, that is because Leventhal counts to total value of a Japanese-funded development project upon groundbreaking, rather than in increments as the project is built.

As in the past, office buildings accounted for the biggest share of Japanese purchases, followed by hotels, residential property, mixed use developments, retail buildings, land and golf courses.

DEBATE '88 UCLA

DEBATE: Preparations

The Intramural Field provides ample parking space for the media trailers while the James West Center provides conference space and meeting areas.

Campus Involvement

Direct campus involvement in the debate will be limited, but "some faculty members will be available for comment after the debate and some networks could solicit opinions from the students as well," Sandbrook said.

At Wake Forest University, where the first debate was held Sept. 25, rooms were set up where students could watch the debate. But a similar arrangement may not be possible at UCLA, Sandbrook explained, because "with just a few days (to prepare) some things are not as possible."

He conceded that although most members of the UCLA community would like to watch the debate from inside the Pavilion, "It's probably more valuable to be at home in front of a television set watching."

Only 1,000 people will view the debate directly — party members from both campaigns and members of the media. Chancellor Charles Young, UC President David Gardner and a handful of university officials will be included in the audience, Sandbrook said.

Ackerman Union's Grand Ballroom will serve as the operating center for the expected 2,500 press members.

The debate was officiallly scheduled for Thursday by the Commission on Presidential Debates at noon yesterday.

TICKETS: Not for public

Debates, which is sponsoring the event, the Democratic party and the Republican party. These groups will then distribute their tickets to party members and people involved in organizing the debate.

In an interview with the Daily Bruin, Assistant Chancellor John Sandbrook explained why such a small number of tickets were available.

"The commission on presidential debates has decided that the debates are best conducted within the confines of a limited seating capacity," he said "We have been asked to hold the debate in the interest of national public service and it is proper to respond to that."

Janet Brown, executive director of the debate commission said Friday that because of "serious production problems," the audience would be kept at a minimum.

"We only need a small stage," she explained, "but audience noise can make things very difficult for the production crews."

Lebo emphasized that the public should not call Pauley Pavilion in an attempt to obtain tickets.

About 100 gay couples wed in mass ceremony

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — About 100 same-sex couples exchanged vows on the steps of City Hall Sunday, kissed in a shower of rice and appealed for legal recognition of their relationships.

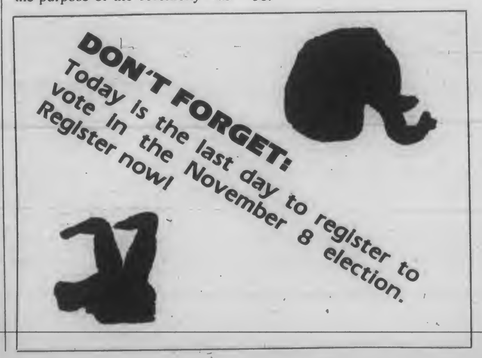
"Maybe this will lead to the day we can have our families, parents and friends at our weddings, not just our funerals," said Pat Normoiu, an openly gay candidate for the city's Board of Supervisors.

The service was performed by the Rev. Matt Garrigan of the Radiant Life Ministries, a predominantly gay church. But the purpose of the ceremony was not just to join the couples but also to support legislation to extend health and work benefits to unmarried domestic partners.

"Everyone deserves a legally recognized domestic union," said Karen Sullivan, one of the organizers.

One male couple, dressed in black tie, took part in the rite as a way to make a political statement.

"Then, towards the end of the ceremony, I though more about my love. It was a very emotional experience," David Thompson, 27, said after the ceremony in which he "married" Pat Parr, 38.



Wealth of richest Americans detailed in Forbes list

By Mariann Caprino
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market crash wiped out some of their wealth, but according to Forbes magazine the 400 richest Americans still had a total worth of about $220 billion, enough to cover the federal budget deficit for a year.

Last year's Oct. 19 financial market debacle reduced the fortunes of many of the ultra-affluent 400 and caused 22 former members to be dropped from the list because their fortunes slipped below Forbes' $225 million cutoff.

Still, the average fortune on this year's edition of the annual list comes to $551 million, up $1 million from last year.

The list appears in the Oct. 24 edition of Forbes, and includes information on holdings as of Aug. 30.

The federal deficit for the fiscal year that just ended was about $150 billion. The total national debt is about $2.5 trillion.

Sam Walton, 70, easily held the No. 1 spot for the fourth year in a row, even though his net worth shrank by a whopping $2 billion following the crash.

Walton, head of the Arkansas-based Wal-Mart discount store empire, scoffs at his $6.7 billion in riches. He calls it "just paper — all I own is a pickup truck and a little Wal-Mart stock."

By Forbes' estimates of worldwide wealth, Walton rates fifth behind Japan's Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, $18.9 billion; Taikichiro Mori, $18 billion; and Haruhiko Yoshimoto, $7.8 billion; and Canada's Kenneth Cole Irving, $8 billion.

The number of American billionaires nearly doubled in 1987, but Forbes' 1988 list has only two additional billionaires, bringing the total to 51. Japan has the second-highest number of identified billionaires with 34.

Runner-up to Walton on the billionaire list is John Werner Kluge, the head of Metromedia Co. with a net worth of $3.2 billion.

Next in line are H. Ross Perot, the founder of Electronic Data Systems who wants to overhaul the nation's postal system, with $3 billion; publishers Samuel I. Jr. and Donald Newhouse, $2.6 billion each; and Pittsburgh industrialist Henry Lea Hillman, $2.5 billion.

Underscoring the adage that the more you have, the more you can lose, billionaires were among those hit hard by the crash. Among the big losers were David Packard, founder of Hewlett-Packard, media magnate Keith Rupert Murdoch and retailer Leslie Wexner, each of whom suffered losses of up to 50 percent of their fortunes.

Murdoch was on a record money-making pace in 1987, tripling his net worth to $2.1 billion before the crash. But his fortune dwindled to $1.2 billion following Black Monday, relegating him to 35th place on the Forbes list instead of eighth. Fox Broadcasting, which he is trying to build into a fourth national broadcasting network, is expected to lose $80 million this year.

Seven new names joined the elite billionaire club, including flamboyant New York real estate developer Donald Trump, who claims a net worth of $3.47 billion though Forbes' estimate is in the $1 billion range.

Joining Trump are:

■ Sumner Murray Redstone, who boosted his balance sheet with the take-over of Viacom, $1.4 billion.

■ Press-shy Charles Feeney, who runs Duty-Free Shoppers at airports, $1.3 billion.

■ Charles Sammons, head of the privately held Sammons Enterprises, the nation's 15th-largest cable TV operator, $1.3 billion.

■ Charles de Ganahl Koch and David Hamilton Koch, brothers involved in oil services, $1.1 billion each.

■ Ronald O. Perelman, takeover strategist and head of Revlon, $1 billion.

William Henry Gates III, who dropped out of Harvard and founded the Microsoft software company, remained the youngest self-made billionaire at age 32. His net worth is estimated at $1.1 billion.

The oldest person new to the list is Mansfield Freeman, who holds a stake in American International Group. With a fortune of $240 million, he made the list for the first time at age 93.

Among the 52 who disappeared from the list, 22 vanished because of Black Monday-associated losses, 26 were surpassed by greater fortunes and four died.

On the list, as usual, was Forbes Publisher Malcolm Forbes, whose holdings include a 400-square mile Colorado ranch and a French chateau. While not officially disclosing his net worth, the magazine put Forbes in the $500 million category but cited various published reports that pegged his wealth at $400 million to more than $1 billion.

cold," she said. "He doesn't have warmth, even though the message tends to be one of caring for people, for the hungry and homeless."

She said the delivery of the words seems to contradict what he's saying.

What she called his "non-verbal message" is "cold, short phrases being thrown out like bullets."

"When people look at a verbal and a non-verbal message and they're in contradiction, what we tend to do is subconsciously believe the non-verbal message," she said.

Is there something Dukakis could do to warm up his image?

"I'm not sure from my experience that a person like that is changeable," said Guggenheim.

"I think they could make television films which would help allay some of this problem," he said. "But it would have to be done by an outside hand. The moments in which he does show some sensitivity, warmth and compassion are recorded . . . They wouldn't be dishonest moments. They just would be moments the candidate doesn't feel are important."

Bruin and Village Fox theaters. Tom Franklin, a candidate in the 43rd assembly district, waved a "Bush for President" poster and exchanged political viewpoints with zealous Dukakis enthusiasts.

Several drivers honked and yelled support for Franklin's efforts as they passed. The same people heckled the pro-Dukakis demonstrators.

"The celebrity event is just a gimmick," Franklin said. "Listening to Rob Lowe talk about politics is like listening to my mother talk about the NFL draft."

Republicans also sponsored a week of voter registration drives, he said.

The real value of the celebrity tour is the significant impact the stars have on public awareness, said Ziegler.

"It's like the midnight ride of Paul Revere," he said. "The message is 'you're in (registered to vote) by Tuesday or you're out on election day.'"

The caravan registered approximately 100,000 people by a final fund-raising party Monday night, Ziegler estimated.

Some students merely hoped to excite people about voting regardless of who they choose, said Matthew Wagner, a Bruin Democrat.

"If people want a better America, they have to take part," he said. "You can't be passive."

which sped off southbound on Hilgard Avenue.

Acid burns student

One person was injured just after the robbery attempt. UCLA student Kathy Whittaker, one of several people who responded to Dowie's screams, leaned on the parked car and exposed her right leg to the acid, which was eating away at the car's paint and tires.

A friend drove Whittaker to UCLA Medical Center, where she was treated and released for chemical burns, according to police reports.

UCPD Sgt. B.J. Franklin said several witnesses saw the two men flee, and one witness recorded part of the getaway car's license number.

Police reports describe each attacker as a black male, about 25 years old and six feet tall. Both were wearing dark pants and white shirts, according to police reports. Sgt. Franklin said there is no description for a third suspect, who drove the black Toyota getaway car.

Saw attackers before

Dowie said she first encountered the assailants a day before in a shopping mall parking garage in Beverly Hills.

After she parked her car, Dowie said she and her mother, Edith, saw the two men staring at them as they walked toward a parking garage elevator.

As Dowie and her mother stepped into the elevator, "A third person in a black sports car revved his engine at us obnoxiously loud," Dowie said.

Dowie said she reported the incident to shopping center security officials.

The next day, Dowie returned to the shopping center and parked in the same location. She thinks the men probably saw her again, agreed to steal her watch and followed her home to the Pi Beta Phi sorority house.

posal that Pinochet remain president until 1997. Pinochet, who ousted elected Marxist President Salvador Allende in a 1973 coup that left Allende dead, lost by about 800,000 votes or a margin of more than 11 percent.

The vote was carried out under a 1980 constitution. That document also calls for elections for president and congress to be held in December 1989, with the winners taking office in March.

Opposition leaders have pressed Pinochet's military government to move up the date of elections and make other constitutional changes.

Their proposals include eliminating a constitutional ban on Marxist groups, and allowing the entire Senate — not just two-thirds — to be elected rather than appointed.

Opposition leaders also want to streamline the process by which future constitutional changes can be made.

"We will formally call on those holding power now to talk to reach an agreement," opposition spokesman Patricio Aylwin said in an interview published Sunday in the newspaper La Epoca. "We will take the initiative by making a proposal and call to the armed forces."

Aylwin is spokesman for the 16-party coalition that urged Chileans to vote "no" in the referendum.

A 4-man military junta acts as the legislature of this South America country, which has been ruled by freely elected, democratic governments for most of its 178-year history as an independent nation.

The junta is empowered to change the constitution, but Pinochet said in a speech broadcast nationwide the night after the referendum that he had no intention of doing so.

Ricardo Lagos, a prominent, moderate Socialist, acknowledged that negotiations, if they take place, would take time. "The people are mature enough to understand that 15 years of dictatorship don't end in 15 hours."

But other Pinochet opponents already have served notice they don't intend to wait long or peacefully. On Saturday, a coalition of leftist parties publicly called for Pinochet's immediate resignation.

The situation sets up potential clashes between the government and its opponents. In the two days following the election, tens of thousands of Chileans celebrated Pinochet's defeat with spontaneous demonstrations in the streets of the capital and other major cities.

Citing that UCLA was the most diverse university among major research universities in the country, Young recognized the dynamic and vital role of not only APA-UCLA but also the 107 support groups sponsored by the Alumni Association.

However, diversity is not limited to enrollment, but must exist in the curriculum, faculty and staff as well, observed Lucie Cheng, director of UCLA Center for Pacific Rim Studies.

"It is not possible now . . . for a university to be excellent without being truly diverse," said Cheng.

Elderly drivers greater risk, council reports

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Older drivers pose a greater risk of being involved in accidents but driving should not be restricted solely on the basis of age, says a government study released today

The study by the National Research Council says roadway signs and markings should be redesigned to better meet the needs of older drivers, and that screening should be improved to identify impaired drivers of all ages.

The report urges states to tighten their screening programs and issue restricted licenses in some cases such as limiting certain applicants to daytime driving only.

It criticized a movement in some states to allow drivers licenses to be renewed by mail without drivers being required to undergo vision tests at least every four years.

But the study concluded that "age alone is a poor predictor of the (driving) performance of any individual," although acknowledging after age 75 a driver is "about twice as likely (per mile driven) to be involved in a crash" as middle-aged drivers.

The National Research Council panel, composed of experts assembled by the National Academy of Sciences, spent two years examining questions about transportation and the elderly.

It said problems of meeting the transportation needs of older citizens will increase in the years ahead as the number of people over 75 increases and more elderly people live in the suburbs where less public transportation is available.

Today about 12 percent of the population is 65 years of age or older and by the year 2020 the number will increase to about 17 percent, or more than 50 million elderly citizens who will be eligible tosdrive.

"The states are not prepared to handle the growing number of very old drivers or to identify those at high risk of aecident involvement," the study concluded.

"Most older persons will probably be quite capable and safe drivers. But current statistics indicate that drivers 75 and over are more at risk of crash involvement than the average driver . . . These facts must be acknowledged even though there is no justification for restricting driving on the basis of age alone."

Furthermore, the panel said, elderly people are more likely to suffer serious or fatal injuries than other drivers in accidents of similar severity.

The study said elderly people, especially those 75 years or older, often have problems reading traffic signs, seeing clearly at night, gauging traffic flow when merging into traffic or making left turns, and turning their heads when backing their vehicles.

But "when examined in terms of incidents, the problem that older persons represent to overall traffic safety is small relative to that of the (teen-age) driver," the committee wrote.

to disperse.

Information compiled from hospital and police sources in various parts of the country indicated about 200 people killed and several hundred injured. It seemed likely the actual death toll was higher.

No official death toll has been issued.

The unrest began about 10 days ago with non-violent strikes demanding higher wages to keep up with inflation. Algiera's annual unemployment rate is estimated at 40 percent and food prices have risen by at least 40 percent since January. But the government so far has vowed to stick to an austerity plan prompted in part by the falling price of oil, the nation's main export.

Bendjedid proclaimed a state of emergency Thursday. On Friday, the Military Command ordered soldiers to shoot if demonstrators failed to disperse.

At Mustapha Hospital in Algiers, physicians moved patients out of the hospital to make room for the hundreds of injured demonstrators.

"It's terrible. Beirut. Like Beirut. The same thing," said a Frenchman arriving Sunday in Paris on Air Algeria's only scheduled flight of the day. He was interviewed on French television. He was not identified.

Algiers was mostly calm Sunday as army helicopters armed with rockets flew at low altitudes, apparently to discourage the formation of crowds.

Algerian radio reported outbreaks of violence had occurred in the region east of Algiers, as well as in Ouargla, Djelfa and other centers of the southern desert.

An Islamic fundamentalist group calling itself the Movement for Algerian Renewal on Sunday demanded removal of the president, Interior Minister Khediri and the head of the ruling National Liberation Front Party, Mohamed Cherif Messaadia.

The Movement for Algerian Renewal came to public attention Saturday when it demanded cheaper food and the dismantling of the political apparatus.

Tanjug reported, without details, that "urgent measures" were imposed Monday in Titograd. It said later 1,000 construction workers called off a strike after local party leaders promised to consider their demands.

An official reached at the government information office in Titograd reported more police patrols in some parts of the region and said civilian defense units were told "to display special vigilence and prevent any repetition of the unrest of the past weekend."

He said steps would be taken to ease shortages of such food staples as meat, bread and cooking oil.

In Belgrade, the federal government said it was rescinding a 28.5 percent rise in electricity prices announced Oct. 1, the fourth of the year.

Workers in Titograd, who chanted at a rally Friday for bread to feed their families, blame local party leaders for the economic troubles and demand their dismissal.

Slam the brakes on auto insurance rates

Ken Kecskes

Don't know which auto insurance reform initiative to support on this November's ballot? Well, if you don't, you're not alone. Plenty of Californian's are puzzled by the five auto insurance propositions: 100, 101, 103, 104 and 106. And insurance companies, lawyers, and consumer groups are not making it any easier. Television commercials covering the initiatives bend the truth and promise quick and easy solutions. Literature distributed by each group is high on glitz and low on substance. The facts are distorted. All five propositions fail to offer a complete answer to California's auto insurance crisis, but Prop. 103 comes closest to the mark.

Californians spend too much on auto insurance. The average cost of a premium in California is about $600, which ranks California third highest of the 50 states in premium cost. It's even worse for Los Angeles drivers. According to a report by the state Senate's Insurance Committee, L.A. drivers shell out an average of $1,100 a year for auto insurance. On campus, policies ranging around $2,000 are not uncommon among students.

All sides agree that auto insurance reform is needed. But the debate centers over how to cut premiums and slow skyrocketing rates.

Two weeks ago, this column focused on two of the three leading initiatives — Prop. 100 and 104. Briefly, here's what I found.

Prop. 100, the "good driver" initiative sponsored by the Insurance Consumer Action Network, an organization funded by the California Trial Lawyers Assn., would regulate insurance rates but would fail to eliminate wasteful lawsuits. Prop. 100 would cut rates 20 percent, open the insurance company's books for public scrutiny, and eliminate the industry's anti-trust exemption. However, it completely forbids any type of no-fault system, so "pain and suffering" cases will continue to backlog our civil courts. The Office of Consumer Advocate that Prop. 100 creates would cost taxpayers about $20 million.

Prop. 104, the "no-fault" measure sponsored by the insurance industry, plans to curtail the myriad of personal injury lawsuits that sap the insurance industry. The initiative would create a no-lawsuit, "no-fault" system, where accident victims collect injury claims from their own insurance company — regardless of fault. Claimants can file for up to $10,000 in medical coverage and $15,000 in lost wages. Victims cannot sue for extra money unless damages are "serious and permanent," or if damages are so great as to cause out-of-pocket expenses. The U.S. Department of Transportation has found that "no-fault" states are extremely successful in eliminating wasteful litigation and providing full, speedy payment of claims. However, Prop. 104 does not allow for rate regulation, so the money insurance companies save in reduced lawsuits might not be passed down to consumers. It also maintains the industry's anti-trust exemption, denies the public the right to examine industry records, and makes it difficult for consumers to shop comparatively for auto insurance.

Both Prop. 100 and 104 contain provisions that nullify the other initiatives. Technically, all the the initiatives could pass, if all of the measures received a majority vote. But Prop. 100 and 104, as well as 101, contain cancellation clauses that nullify the other insurance measures if they amass more votes than the other initiatives on the ballot. Prop. 100 cancels the insurance industry initiatives 101, 104 and 106, and would virtually prohibit a no-fault system in the future. Prop. 104 and 101 bar any rate regulation in the future, and nullify Prop. 100 and 103.

Most of the initiatives — Prop 100, 101, 104 and 106 — practically eliminate any opportunity to fine tune the measures after they are passed, since they can only be changed by a two-thirds majority of the state legislature. It is virtually impossible to attain a two-thirds majority in our state legislature, especially when the powerful insurance lobby breathes down legislators' necks.

But Prop. 100 and 104 are not the only measures on the ballot.

Proposition 101, sponsored by Assemblyman Richard Polanco (D-Los Angeles) and some members of the insurance industry, reduces bodily injury liability rates 50 percent. The cut, according to Prop. 101's sponsors, would slice insurance rates one-third. Prop. 101 justifies this cut to the insurance companies by limiting an accident victim's opportunity to sue.

Prop. 103 targets excessive lawsuits as the cause of California's astronomical insurance rates. It limits the amount of money that can be won in a "pain and suffering" lawsuit to 25 percent of the amount the victim collects in economic losses — repairing a car, treating injuries and recovery of lost wages. (Thus, this initiative favors people with expensive cars, because they can claim greater economic losses and therefore collect more money in pain and suffering cases). If damages are "serious and permanent," however, then victim can sue for extra damages. Unfortunately, "serious and permanent" damages are so narrowly defined in the text of the law that it would be nearly impossible to file an added claim, unless a victim is severely

Holding the debate at Pauley: what's in it for UCLA students?

By Doug Mechaber

UCLA has been selected as the site for the next presidential debate on October 13 or 14. Presumably, the bipartisan debate delegation selected UCLA over U$C and Pepperdine, the other institutions considered, because we are centrally located, a prestigious public university, and Pauley was free of charge as offered by Charles Young. The travesty is that at a public school, no student seats will be made available. What civics lesson should we learn from this?

Obviously, we rabble-rousing UCLA students pose a grave security threat. And the Secret Service must consider Jim Wahler's inflammatory statements to the Los Angeles Times evidence of subversive tendencies, because the whole football team will be moved from its normal practice site of Spaulding Field. Yet we were able to listen to Dukakis speak at Royce Hall this summer. There are several very simple precautions that would remove all elements of risk and also would result in fair distribution of tickets to students.

Apparently, no seating will be allowed in most of the blue area and all of the yellow area, and the press will be restricted to the floor. My proposal would allow students to sit in as many of the yellow seats as are available. Interested students would submit their name during a restricted time for a random drawing for single seats. At the time of seat pickup, each student would be required to sign the ticket, it being non-transferable. Well before the debate, students would be required to be in place. No book check would be required, since we would know well in advance that no packs of any kind would be allowed, and storage as such even near Pauley would pose a problem.

If necessary, most students would be willing to pay one to two dollars each for extra security in the student section. Chancellor Young, at Pauley Pavilion basketball games, UCLA students are among the most well behaved spectators I've ever seen. Additionally, seating could be assigned randomly, and special sanctions could be agree upon to prohibit and discourage any outbursts.

Though having the debate at "the house that John (Wooden) built" brings prestige and luster to the University of California and UCLA in particular, there will be disruptions to our life of all sorts which are perhaps not commensurate with the added advantage. Student foot traffic, parking, athletic team practices and other activities will all be drastically inconvenienced.

We deserve something in return. What use would it be for UCLA to gain a reputation of pandering to high-rollers, the people with connections, the privileged few? This is a university — a community of scholars — a place to learn, to both challenge preconceived notions and to reform one's own ideas. What an incredible opportunity for us to participate in a historic display of the democratic process. Let's not miss it.

Comm Board's commitment to student media

Editor:

As a result of the counterpoint written by Robert J. O'Connor in the Viewpoint section on October 4, 1988, the ASUCLA Communications Board wishes to clarify its official position in regard to its ongoing commitment to the media it oversees.

There are provisions in the Communications Board By-Laws that mandate the existence of KLA Radio, the Daily Bruin, Bruin Life, NOMMO, La Gente, Ha'Am, Together, Pacific Ties and Ten Percent. Additionally, "This Board is the independent publisher, manager, and operator of student communication media . . . at . . . UCLA," and "The first and foremost responsibility of the Board is to promote and advance its student communications media" (Comm Board Constitution, Article II, Sections A and C).

It is the express hope of the Communications Board that this helps to dispel any misconceptions that may have been inferred from Robert J. O'Connor's counterpoint.

How about making it pay-as-you-play?

Editor:

As I stood among thousands of other people last Thursday morning, hoping for an appointment to enroll in a recreation class that evening, I realized that something was amiss. The first people to walk by me, flashing their sacred yellow appointment slips, said that they had gotten to the Wooden Center before 6 a.m., despite the fact that appointments were not handed out until seven.

When I entered the Wooden Center that evening with my appointment slip (one of only 1,200 available), the line for open enrollment stretched farther than I could see. When I left a few minutes later, the line was substantially shorter. Apparently the students in the back gave up as they saw class after class fill to capacity.

It is unfair that students who can't get into recreation classes pay for the classes anyway through their reg. fees. The system should be changed, and here is how:

All recreation class costs that are currently included in the reg. fees should be omitted. Extracurricular class fees would then be paid for by the student on an individual basis. Since each program would pay for itself, the University could hire enough instructors to keep up with demand. With this system, students who choose either not to take these classes or who currently get squeezed out because of inadequate facilities would not be penalized with unnecessarily high reg. fees, and all students who wanted to take extracurricular classes could do so.

The Bruin should remain objective

Editor:

I abhor the fact that the Daily Bruin allowed a blatantly biased article to appear on the front page of the Thursday, Oct. 6 edition, when in fact it should have been printed on the opinion page. Staff writer Irena Auerbuch misled readers by implying that a survey had been taken.

In the lead, Auerbuch claimed that there were "informal interviews," and yet she only quoted one student. An objective reporter would gather opinions from both sides so that readers could judge for themselves.

The headline was even more despicable. It read, "Bentsen wins debate UCLA students say." Only the 60 students in the Cooperage were observed. Again, this is misleading because it implied that a survey had been taken of the entire campus. Obviously, 60 students who happened to be in the Cooperage at the time of the debate do not and cannot represent the opinion of the entire campus. It was not a true cross section of UCLA students (there are 35,000 of them). Some would even argue that the gathering was an organized effort on the part of the Democrats.

I am appalled that the Daily Bruin has the nerve to declare what the reaction of the viewers is when the national press (L.A. Times, N.Y. Times) did not dare print such presumptuous hogwash.

One reporter's opinion among 35,000 is not very credible

INSURANCE: Prop. 103 stalls high premiums handicapped after an accident. Thus, a broken arm, torn ligaments, and some internal damage are not serious enough for claims under Prop. 101.

Prop. 101 is a horrible document. In addition to the ridiculously narrow definition of serious and permanent damages, sponsors admit other flaws. Because the proposition is worded so poorly, persons who have no health insurance would actually collect more from their insurance company than someone who has health insurance. Further, victims who have other types of insurance must use any worker's compensation or state disability pay before receiving money from the insurance company.

Another initiative with serious problems is Proposition 106, a measure somewhat reluctantly sponsored by the Independent Insurance Agents and Brokers of California. The proposition would limit attorney's contigency fees in all tort actions. Currently, lawyers will represent some clients on a contingency basis, which a client pays his lawyer only if he wins a judgment or settlement. Thus, if Prop. 106 passes, it would be devastating to consumers who can't afford the high hourly prices of experienced lawyers. And the measure does not sanction insurance company lawyers, so that the industry can retain their "big guns."

The initiative poses a threat to all professional fees. Ralph Nader, the consumer activist, noted that an initiative limiting attorney's fees could "open a Pandora's Box" that would lead to caps on other professional fees, including those of insurance agents. Coincidentally, soon after Nader's announcement, the two largest insurance companies in California, State Farm and the Auto Mobile Club of Southern California, pulled their support from the half-brained measure.

The best initiative on the ballot is Access To Justice's Proposition 103. The measure rolls back liability rates 20 percent from Nov. 8, 1987. Thereafter, "good drivers," those with three years of driving experience and only one moving violation, enjoy a permanent 20 percent discount. Insurance companies must base rates on a driver's record, miles driven, and years of driving experience. Prop. 103 does not abolish territorial ratings, but prohibits it from being the the primary factor determining auto insurance rates.

Prop. 103 also calls for the election of the Insurance Commissioner, who would authorize all rate increases and handle consumer problems. The Department of Insurance would be expanded, but with no cost to the taxpayer — insurance companies would have to pick up the bill. In fact, because Prop. 103 would reduce auto, fire, and liability insurance, the measure would actually save taxpayers money.

Prop. 103 eliminates the industry's anti-trust exemption and allows banks to sell insurance for increased competition. The measure also forces insurance companies to open their books and allow consumers to compare prices. Finally, a two-thirds majority of the legislature is not required to make any changes in the measure if it passes. Thus, even though Prop. 103 lacks a "no-fault" provision to cut wasteful litigation, it would be easy to add such a clause in the future.

Prop. 103's huge rate cuts poses a big threat for the insurance industry, and some insurance companies have threatened to leave California. However, it is doubtful that the industry would abandon a $10 billion dollar market.

Some people complain that an elected insurance official might be "bought" by the insurance industry with their tremendous reserves. Currently, though, the insurance industry "buys" the insurance commissioner through contributions to the governor, who appoints the insurance commissioner. However, if Prop. 103 passes, voters can get into the system, and express their opinion on how much they should pay for auto insurance, since Californians are denied the right to choose if they want insurance or not.

Five insurance initiatives will be on this November's ballot, and only Prop. 103 offers a viable solution. Of course, it does not address the countless civil court cases that cost taxpayers and the insurance industry so much money. But it's a start. And if the legislature can complete the reform work undertaken by Access to Justice and the voters, then perhaps everyone will save money — insurers and consumers. ■

The ACLU protects the Bill of Rights

Editor:

Regarding Isaac Colvin's letter, "One must choose the ACLU or the First Amendment" (Bruin, October 7): Mr. Colvin clearly misunderstands the purpose of the ACLU. It is precisely the upholding of the First Amendment for which the ACLU struggles. The case of religion in public schools is particularly clear. Religion cannot be permitted there because of the section of the First Amendment which Mr. Colvin quotes: "the Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." If a particular type of religion (Protestantism presumably) were allowed in schools, then the rights of those non-protestants would be violated and the lawmakers would be guilty of supporting a specificninstitution of religion. The ACLU does not say that free exercise of religion is wrong; it is the forced exercise of religion to which they lawfully object.

Correction

Because of a typo, there was an error in the first paragraph of the counterpoint entitled, "Women work out of economic necessity and for self-fulfillment" (Bruin, October 10).

The paragraph should have read: "When Professor William Allen asks the question, 'What is responsible for the spectacular increase in the number of women workers?' (Bruin, Registration Issue) he asks an important question but bases his analysis on several (unexpressed) assumptions that lead him to utterly inane conclusions."

Campaign '88: Trivial, superficial and inane

By Jonathan Wolman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The other day Darleen Reilly picked up the phone and called a local radio station to play a game it calls "Name That Sound." She correctly identified a "rack being rolled into the dishwasher," and came away $4,000 richer.

Then the disc jockeys turned to politics.

One of them described the irony of Lloyd Bentsen and Dan Quayle — "these two millionaires," he said derisively — sharing a stage in Omaha to discuss all the good things they would do for the common man.

It was a cynical moment, but the presidential campaigns have invited this sort of contempt. From the moment the conventions ended in August, it's been a dispiriting race. It began trivial, quickly turned negative, and now it's gotten worse.

George Bush generally gets the blame for touching off the trivia. Budget deficits are enormous, a drug epidemic has hit practically every strata of society, superpower relations at a turning point, farmers coming off another tough year, nine Americans remain hostage in Lebanon . . .

With all this facing the next president, Bush has been bludgeoning Dukakis over the Pledge of Allegiance and a Massachusetts prison furlough program. He initiated a made-for-TV battle of cop endorsements and summoned reporters to Boston Harbor to ridicule Dukakis over its filth — while refusing to answer questions about administration environmental vetoes.

It got so bad that Richard Nixon, of all people, described campaign '88 as "trivial, superficial and inane." Nixon said Bush and Dukakis "have found that the surest way they could make the evening news was to be silly or irresponsible or both."

Barry Goldwater, summoned for an Arizona campaign appearance, startled Quayle by telling his fellow Republican: "I hope you'll take this kindly. But I want you to go back and tell George Bush to start talking about the issues."

Don't hold your breath. Trivializing is working for Bush: He's come from behind to enjoy a comfy lead in the polls and he continues to put Dukakis on the defensive on these "gut issues" (Dukakis finally answered on Saturday after a week of Bush abuse on crime policy).

Behind in the polls, the Dukakis people figured they better answer in kind.

No sooner did the millionaires' debate end then Dukakis hit the air with some anti-Quayle commercials.

One of these days — maybe tomorrow! — the campaign may focus for a minute on something like strategic doctrine or Central American policy or a real war, not a phony war, on drugs. But unless there is a sudden sea change in the tenor of campaign '88, millions of registered voters are going to wake up on Nov. 8 scratching their heads and asking, where do these guys stand?

amendments to the Constitution that guard against unwarranted government control — are preserved for each new generation. The ACLU is dedicated to liberty and justice for all and wants those values extended to everybody. Consequently the ACLU's clients have been Ku Klux Klan members, Black Panthers and, more recently, Ollie North. The ACLU has defended Blacks, Jews, women, draft resistors, lesbians and gay men, people with disabilities and members of religious sects.

While the ACLU believes in separation of church and state, it has also fought to protect the religious convictions of many groups. It has never sued to have "one nation under God" removed from the Pledge of Allegiance.

No one agrees with everything the ACLU has done. The important thing is that an organization exists which is willing to protect the rights of all of us. As President Eisenhower (a Republican) once said in a letter to the chairperson of the ACLU's board: "It is good to be reminded that the members of the American Civil Liberties Union and the overwhelming majority of my fellow citizens are working together in this field (of civil liberties) with steadfast vigor and understanding."

It is also good to be reminded that the ACLU would defend Isaac Colvin's misrepresentation of their mission.

In all likelihood, there have been times in your life when you've read something that just about drove you crazy. Maybe it was something someone gave you on Bruin Walk. Or maybe it was part of the assigned reading for a class. In fact, it might've even been an article in the Bruin.

As long as there's Bruin viewpoint, though, you have a potential recourse (even if it was an article in our section that annoyed you in the first place).

Our pages are largely filled with letters, viewpoints and counterpoints from students much like yourself, who — remembering to include their name, year, major and phone number — turned their submissions into the box on the receptionists' desk in 112 Kerckhoff Hall.

Counterpoint

Don't cloud the child-care issue with rhetoric

By Sung J. Hwang

What's going on in the economics department at UCLA? I hope that my first exposures to the writings from the members of the department are only aberrations. In the quarter's first issue of the Daily Bruin (Registration Issue), a professor in the department, William Allen, writes an obviously biased opinion based on fallacious logic. And then, later, a counterpoint article by Lawrence Lee (Bruin, October 3) wasn't much better; at the very least, next time its author might want to try consulting a dictionary.

Dr. Allen cites three simplified statistics to support his position that most mothers work by choice, not out of economic necessity.

First, he says "median annual income of families with husbands as the sole earner averaged 96 percent of the median income of all families." It follows, he claims, that mothers are not being forced to work because of economic necessity. It is a pretty impressive feat of logical hopscotch. Maybe it is possible that the data he cites indicate that if the husband earns enough by himself (96 percent of the median), then the mother does not have to go to work. To me, the data suggest that two wage earners in a typical multiple wage earner family together earn about the same income as a typical single wage earner husband. The conclusion is the opposite of Dr. Allen's. In a family whose father cannot provide adequate income, the mother has to work because only by combining the income of the two can the family reach the median income level. Remember, we are talking about an average family. At the bottom of the economic ladder there are millions of families in which even the combined efforts of the father and mother cannot provide sufficient income.

Allen goes on to say that there has been a positive correlation between the real earnings of sole wage earner husband and the entrance of mothers into the labor force. Is it not obvious that the real earnings of the sole wage earner husband have to be increasing? If the income of the father of the family is decreasing, the mother would be forced to work out of necessity. In order to make valid analysis, we need to know the real earnings of husbands in multiple wage earner families.

He does not stop there. He cites that there is no "systematic relationship between unemployment rates of married men and changes in the labor force participation rate of married women." Therefore, he again concludes, it is not necessity that is compelling women to enter the work force. I guess that it did not occur to him that when men are having difficulty finding work, women may also be having problems. Employers in general do not fire men in multitudes so that they can give those jobs to the women forced to enter the job market. When times are tough for men, you can figure that things are even tougher for women in terms of finding jobs. Therefore, the lack of correlation between the unemployment rate of men and the employment rate of women is utterly meaningless.

Dr. Allen indulges in such fallacious reasoning just to justify his hostility toward federal funding of child care. The reality is that there are millions of working mothers, single and married, who had to enter the labor force out of sheer necessity. It is irresponsible to use misleading arguments to deny reality. Why? The stakes are too high: adequate care and living standards for millions of American children who live on the brink of poverty. This is an issue that requires reasoned, responsible discourse, not politically motivated rhetoric parading as "scholarly" opinion.

Regarding Mr. Lee's article, suffice it to say that "cockamamie" is a real word. I cannot think of a better word to describe his partisan diatribe. As James Thurber says, "You could look it up."

The irrepressible rocker/punker/ madman Iggy Pop.

Verdict on 'bad boy' Iggy Pop: still full of fury, anger, adrenalin

Rob Winfield, Contributor

■ CONCERT: Iggy Pop, Social Distortion. At the Hollywood Palladium. Friday, Oct. 7, 1988.

Iggy Pop's a bit of a misnomer. The "original bad boy" 's not pop in the least; he's hell with a microphone. He's a rager with a head full of fire, a mind full of anger, a body full of adrenalin. He's the Iggy we first met in '69 and he's badder than ever.

Sure. I didn't believe he still had it in him. After his comeback in '86, after four years of nothing, with the album Blah Blah Blah, Iggy appeared to have mellowed out a bit. Maybe that was due to the fact that he worked with Bowie, who's mellowed out a bit himself, on that return.

But with Iggy's current album Instinct, he's proved to be the rocker/punker/madman he's always been. And a trip down to the Hollywood Palladium last Friday to see Iggy and openers Social Distortion confirmed his status among the greats in the music industry.

After the first five minutes on stage, I was convinced Iggy's days of youth are still alive. He literally tore down the walls (I know the one I was sitting on fell over!).

He tossed. He turned. He twisted. He scaled the amps. He threw his microphone stand in every direction. He said fuck more times than I could count. He squirmed on the stage and faked masturbation. He did stage dives into the chaotic crowd. He definitely was Iggy at his psychotic best.

This was a show that didn't matter what he played. As long as it was Iggy in a fury, everything sounded good.

No, this wasn't a show where his mainstream melodies like "Cry for Love" had a place. This was Iggy giving a capacity crowd nineteen raucous rockers, like the inflamed "1969" or the Iggy classic "I Want to Be Your Dog."

Iggy had no intention of calming the riot before him. He shook hands with those that made it onto the stage. He screamed to one body that flew onto the stage: "Yeah, sing along." When Iggy himself took a dive into the audience, three security guards had to pull him out. What did Iggy say when he made it back? "It was nice to know you."

Like I said, this guy's crazy. One would think after 20 years and 14 albums, he'd be getting a little old. Not Iggy. Not even the hardest of his pop side showed through Friday night. "Real Wild Child" was transformed from a melodious radio hit to a gut-busting attack.

As for Iggy's band, they must have taken lessons from the man himself. They couldn't stand still for more than five seconds, constantly running back and forth across stage. At times, I wondered whether these guys would just burn out. Nope.

Iggy's definitely one to take notice of. He ain't no old-timer anymore.

Not quite as energetic, but nevertheless entertaining, was Southern California's own Social Distortion, who flew in from the East Coast after an invitation from Iggy to be the openers.

I don't know about you, but I find it hard to dislike a Social D. performance. Mike Ness and company play like their lives depended on it. And from just watching them, one can see the struggles they've been through.

What made Social D. a pleasant opener was a return to their older material. "Mommy's Little Monster" and "Hour of Darkness" opened their set with the expected circular slammin' pit spinning to the music (Oh, the memories of being a punker!).

All nostalgia aside, Social D. brought on their current KROQ smash "Prison Bound" to close their set and warm things up for Iggy. Personally, Iggy doesn't need a warm-up. But it's always nice to see Social D. moving a step up the ladder every show they play.

McGillis portrays prosecutor of rapists in 'The Accused' haven't played the love interest to somebody, which I have to say was sort of a relief," she said with a laugh.

While researching the role, McGillis called the D.A. who handled her own rape, and studied definitions of rape and force. The hardest part of playing Murphy, she said, was adjusting to the legal dialogue required.

"I had to work my butt off in this movie with this legal lingo," she said. "I mean it's not something I use in my every day life. It's the first movie I had to rehearse on my own."

When McGillis first saw the film, she was startled by a caption the producers had included in the final frames. It was a statistic — "A rape is reported every six minutes" — that still haunts her. "It affected me profoundly. It's pretty powerful, when you think about it. If one every six minutes is reported, how many go unreported?"

By speaking candidly about her own rape, a revelation unknown until recently, McGillis hopes to make a difference. "Quite honestly, the only reason I talk about my own personal case is for those women who do not report it. That's why I did this movie.

"A lot of people still don't look at it as a crime," she said. "A lot of our society still accepts the fact that when a woman says 'no' she means 'yes.' We are very provincial in our thinking with regard to sexual assault. (The film) really does assault that fine line of how far is too far.

"But that's what I really liked about doing this movie. It's complicated. And it's complicated in a way that life is complicated. It's not made easy for movies."

McGillis knows about life's complications. She spent 10 years waitressing before she landed her first role in Reuben, Reuben. All the while, her parents told her: "Go to college; make something of yourself."

Today, her parents can say Kelly made something of herself. But they weren't all wrong. As McGillis recalls, "I've done a lot of slinging hash in my day."

This part of McGillis' past makes her cast a cynical eye at Hollywood. "It's (acting) here today, gone tomorrow," she said. "I can never take it for granted. I have a lot to be thankful for, and a lot to work for."

At this point, McGillis has no ambitions of becoming another Hollywood hyphenate. "I have enough to keep me happy with acting . . . Just leave it with that for a while."

Assistant District Attorney Katheryn Murphy (Kelly McGillis) brings to trial the onlookers who encouraged a devastating crime in 'The Accused.'

Vietnam drama 'G.R. Point' is flawed but thoughtful

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ THEATER: G.R. Point. By David Berry. With Craig Sheffer, Scott Plank, Christopher Birt, David Harris, Dris Kamm, Ronal William Lawrence, Jay Pickett, Rawley Valverde and Takayo Fischer. Directed by Howard Fine. Produced by Courtney H. Burr. At the Callboard Theater at 8451 Melrose Place near La Cienega. Tickets $17.50 on Thurs., Fri.-Sun. $20, all performances at 8 p.m. (213)852-9205 or make reservations through Theatix, (213)466-1767.

G.R. Point is a revival of a Vietnam drama which won a Drama Desk nomination as best-American play and an Obie (the off-Broadway "Oscar") for its original 1977 New York production. It played Los Angeles about six years ago (at the Pilot) although this reviewer did not see it then.

To answer your first question, "G. R. Point" is not someone's name — it is the army's designation for the field morgue: Grave Registration Point. Identifying and cataloging the dead soldiers — logging body pieces as well as personal effects to the phrase, "You frag 'em, we bag 'em" — provide much of the onstage gruesomeness.

The answer to your second question is Platoon. Surely the success of the film was responsible for another look at the play. They are very similar — in outlook — despite the fact that Point is restricted to the G.R. hooch (the barracks attached to the morgue) and the current production of the play at the Callboard has a couple of performances in it which are very showy and impressive.

In a war drama — as Stanley Kubrick discovered to his misfortune — story is all. The horrors of combat are so well known that it takes a gripping melodramatic framework to make an audience put up with it. On a continuum between no story at all (zero) and Phantom of the Opera (10?), Point gets a decent six. Micah Bradshaw, a sensitive but masculine New England grunt, gets transferred into the morgue unit and discovers with horror an exploding morbid, even sexual, fascination with killing and blood. At the point where he thinks he's going over the edge, his best buddy and mentor gets senselessly killed by American fire and his grief provides a catharsis and healing — as if the new wound were so deep that the resulting scar is protection against the insanity into which he was sliding.

For artistic execution (I recognize the irony of some of these phrases), playwright David Berry likewise gets a "B." In the first act especially, he seems immature enough (as an artist) to not have realized that people hardly ever say what they mean. Therefore he never takes the opportunity to exploit dramatic irony and add richness to his characters by allowing an audience to guess at their motives. Everybody says exactly what he means.

As a consequence, director and actors here have fallen into the same trap — not delving for a subtext, most likely because none was hinted at. And so, the actors are restricted to finding the most convincing (and not always interesting) primary line readings for the dialogue. This cast has daring — and as you can see from the photos, good looks — but not much subtlety. Berry has a fair framework to offer, but not quite enough depth with which to engage his cast to keep them from self-consciousness or showing off.

The role of Micah is unquestionably a showy tour de force — an unlikely mix of likability and hysteria — for a go-for-broke performer, and actor Craig Sheffer cannily just manages to keep from going through the back wall as he chews the scenery. His big scene at the end of the second act requires recounting his first big battle to his buddy Zan (Scott Plank): veering wildly between pride and terror; joy at surviving and horror at having experienced an actual orgasm in the middle of it.

Playwright Berry has written an aria for him that tells us what such a reaction ought to be in such an experience, not what they most likely are — repression, sublimation, quiet acceptance. But actor Sheffer embraces the opportunity — like Bette Davis in Of Human Bondage — and if you are not swept away in suspension of

Nostalgic 'Blame It on the Movies II' lacks spark of original

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ THEATER: Blame It On The Movies! II. A revue of movie music by Billy Barnes assisted in compilation by Ron Abel (musical director) and David Galligan (director). Choreographed by Mark Reina. With Lu Leonard, Leslie Easterbrook, Bill Hutton, Dinah Lenney, Peter Marc, Ann Morrison and Donn Simione. At the Coast Playhouse, 8325 Santa Monica Blvd., in West Hollywood. Wed.-Fri., 8 p.m., Sat. 7 and 10 p.m., Sun. matinee at 4. Tickets $18-24. (213)650-8507.

Last Spring, Gregory Harrison's production company which operates the Coast Playhouse allowed associate Bill Hutton to stage a vanity production of sorts, a revue compilation of movie theme songs, Blame It On The Movies.

Using the excellent talents of Billy Barnes to write the segueway material and provide a structure, and David Galligan to stage, the show was a modest hit, filling the 99-seat Coast Playhouse for several months.

The wonderful show unfortunately attracted an older, sophisticated audience which it quickly exhausted and then neither traveled nor even had the legs to move to a bigger L.A. house. It was successful enough, however, to warrant a sequel and now we have Blame It On The Movies II. Blame II bears the same relationship to Blame I as That's Entertainment II did to its predecessor: the best stuff was used up the first time around.

Blame I was near-perfect (allow me to gloss over the exception of actress-singer Michele Nicastro — audiences liked her), as if Barnes and Galligan had been saving up imaginative and hilarious bits for years and finally got to use them.

Using movie theater seats with wheels in the choreography, linking the numbers with Barbara Sharma as a forlorn usherette, giving each performer the torch song that best suited her (especially Patty Tiffany) and basically following a chronological grouping — everything was a delight.

Blame II's challenge was to think up parallels — fast — and comb the annals for a likewise spectacular collections of tunes. Part of the current disappointment is the disappearance of both Sharma and Tiffany, both possessed of genius. The only returning member of the first cast is Hutton, who as a performer doesn't really warrant the reprise. This time he has surrounded himself with lesser lights and their problem is a lack of talent for rock material. Therefore, more noticeably than before, Blame II has to truncate its movie history at around 1960.

The three best performers here are Ann Morrison, Peter Marc and veteran trouper Lu Leonard (best known as the evil matron in Women Behind Bars). Leonard has the shows' wackiest moments reprising "Personality" from (The Road To Utopia) and "San Francisco" with hysterically funny earthquake and fire effects.

Morrison demonstrates a breathtaking range, especially in "Kiss The Boys Goodbye" from the 1941 picture of the same name. Here, playing a bimbo about to marry a rich man and begging for one last night on the town before the wedding, Morrison begins the number like Betty Boop and ends it like Sophie Tucker ("the last of the red hot mamas").

Marc delivers a definitively comic rendition of a novelty entitled "I Get The Neck of The Chicken" (from Seven Days Leave, RKO 1942). The song is about the family member who always gets overlooked and forgotten and can't figure how he has been lucky enough to land the girl of his dreams.

The rest of the performers suffer from an inability to instantly create mood or subtext — the big challenge in giving us a shopping list of some 70 tunes in just over two hours (but Patty Tiffany could). Also, as noted, the best and clearest ideas, as well as the most memorable songs, were used up in Blame I. Leonard substituting as a movie lot guard is not as memorable as Sharma's ditzy usher and the wild inventiveness and execution of the Claude Lelouch "A Man And A Woman" sequence has not been duplicated.

The instantly recognizable performer is Leslie Easterbrook, who was Rhonda, Laverne and Shirley — beautiful blonde chorus girl neighbor. As before, Easterbrook is game for self-parody, and her spectacular body is a splendid prop, but she sings only as well as a showgirl has to.

'Nephilim': mediocre death-rock falters

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

■ ALBUM: The Nephilim. Fields of the Nephilim. RCA/Beggar's Banquet Records.

Life is death. The end is near. You will meet your doom. Etc. Etc.

Death rock, the gloom and doom thing, gothic rock — this whole thing is just wearing itself down.

Andrew Eldritch proved that when he opened the casket and brought the Sisters of Mercy back from the dead.

Now, Fields of the Nephilim have unleashed their long-awaited sequel to their American debut Dawnrazor. Thus the audiences around the world have been asked to tune into eight new cryptic clinchers of The Nephilim. Sure, the title's not very original, but after a name like Dawnrazor, what could beat that.

Well, I've got some good news and some bad news.

First, the good news: the Nephilim have managed to shed that disturbing image of the apocalyptic riders of the storm. (Actually, it was a rather novel idea combining good ol' gothic with the wild, wild west. But let's be real, once is enough).

Now, the bad news: the raw-

REVUE: 'Movies! II'

The translations of the movie seats into clumsily designed and executed panels supposed to be a vertical film strip, and the doubling of the circular stairways — now used whenever inspiration faltered instead of organically as the single one was — are not brilliant.

The biggest gaffe was Donn Simione's big number which closes Act I. Surrounded by the girls, he began "You" off to the side on the stair while strange clunking sounds persisted from center stage behind a darkened drop. We kept wondering Why he didn't react and Was it part of a gag?

Suddenly, the source of the noise was revealed — a sort of a parakeet playground had been assembled for him centerstage, a mock-up of the Manhattan skyline built of painted, wooden crates on which to tapdance furiously. At the climax, while the audience cheered manful, terpsichorean effort in bizarrely cramped space, the windows in the little skyscrapers all lit up. It was too much and you may make of that comment what you will.

To sum up, the evening was charming and never boring. Were we to see it through your parents' eyes, we would love it. Suddenly switching focus to see it as you would, we think you would be mystified. Hutton's big number, a medley of a Barnes original, "Look At Her," and Sammy Cahn/Jule Styne's "Time After Time," sung as a hymn to movie goddess Rita Hayworth before big blowups of her, prompted my 22-year-old companion to whisper to me, "Who was she?"

The solution: take your mother. She will love it and you will have someone to explain the ancient references to. For instance, the trio of girls performs "Nine to Five," stopping every few seconds to admire each other's clothes, shoes and nail polish. One responds, "You like (the nail color), Sylvia? It's 'Jungle Red.' That's from Clare Booth Luce's The Women. (Maybe you'd better take grandma. . . .)

Lu Leonard leads chorus in 'Blame It on the Movies! II.'

Craig Scheffer and Scott Plank in 'G.R. Point'

Rose of Avalanche's hip psychedelic rock

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

■ ALBUM: In Rock. The Rose of Avalanche. Enigma/Fire Records.

If psychedelia truly had a name, it would be the Rose of Avalanche. These five Brits seemed to have missed their era by about 20 years, though. But no complaints are being given here.

The Rose of Avalanche have been around for the last three years, remaining virtually unnoticed (as usual) and producing some of the hippest psychedelic rock in the tradition of Hendrix, the Velvets and countless others.

So one might ask, "Why haven't I heard of them yet?"

Elementary, my dear reader, elementary.

Only now has a record company been bold enough to introduce the Avalanche to the most critical of audiences — the American public. And that magnificent little label is Enigma records.

In the past, the lads have given listeners such remarkable ballads as "Velveteen" and disbelief, it is still great fun.

Scott Plank is wonderful as quiet counterpoint to Sheffer's star turn and UCLA alumnus Jay Pickett provides another reason to visit The Callboard Theater. Production is very good with the minor exception of over-long blackouts for scene changes and one minor anachronism (an actor shows a handful of music tapes and they are cassettes, not eight-tracks).

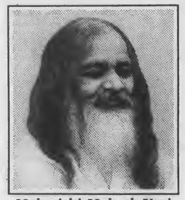
Now for the editorial: one of those things so dreadfully hateful about the war was that it really was a trivial affair. The rest of the world realized the rest of the world would go on as usual — before, during and after.

Tours of duty were limited to one year. If a soldier had a Stateside tragedy (like a parent's natural death), one was shipped right home, "back to the world" of hamburgers and the beach, Top 40 radio and T.V. As if Viet Nam was not The World. Just a place for the regular officer corps to get field promotions (they had been awfully frustrated for 15 years with no wars and attendant stagnation of promotions). That situation was mirrored and exaggerated by the way the corporations, like Dow and G.E., jumped right in to make millions selling napalm, Agent Orange and helicopter parts. Asia and Asians didn't count for much in the equations of the accountants, who were lucky they got a gullible, macho Cold Warrior like LBJ for President at the time.

That's the truth, and we are happy to see the tip of such an iceberg emerge in the better and more truthful of the new spate of Vietnam dramas. That's the trouble with sitting through them — being reminded of the whole dreary, painful, tragic mess. Ultimately, despite its flaws as noted, G.R. Point must be a very good play, because all these thoughts were in my notebook, scribbled in the dark during the climax of the second act.

So there are three good reasons to see G.R. Point: the Grand Guignol of the onstage morgue, the actors' performances if not just their bare chests, and a correct and thoughtful point of view which struggles and succeeds to emerge.

TRANSCENDENTAL MEDITATION



Maharishi Mahesh Yogi
Founder of the Transcendental Meditation program

"Know what you are and act from your full potential."

Bjorn Larsen, Doctoral student in economics, Georgetown University

"TM develops creativity and broad comprehension. My ability to solve complex problems has improved significantly."

John Fleckstein, Ph.D., Chair, Department of Philosophy, University of Louisville

"Transcendental Meditation brings the wisdom of the ages into modern day life. It's a practical technique for unfolding the mind's full potential."

Angela Orange, Foreign languages major, Grinnell College

"TM is a positive addition to life that makes people feel better about themselves. TM helps you to be calmer, improves your outlook, and helps you study."

Steve Henley, Undergraduate business major, University of Florida, Gainesville

"Once you start TM, you have more of what every college student needs—peace of mind. You find yourself on top of things and in control of everyday situations."

Harbour Lynn Hedder, Ph.D. candidate in literature, Harvard University; B.A., U.C.L.A.

"TM has done more for my intellectual development than any other course that I've taken."

What Is TM?

TM is a simple, natural, easily-learned mental technique that is practiced for 15 to 20 minutes twice daily sitting comfortably in a chair with eyes closed. During TM, the mind enjoys a settled state of inner wakefulness, pure consciousness, while the body gains a unique state of deep rest. The TM program, founded 30 years ago by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, is a practical technique. It does not require any specific beliefs or lifestyle.

Eighteen Years of Research

More than 350 scientific studies conducted in the past 18 years at 160 independent research institutions have shown that TM benefits all areas of life: mind, body, behavior, and environment.

Bob Dylan looks back at past of folk, rock, gospel

By Kathryn Baker
Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — How many times have the rumors spread in some nightspot — "Bob Dylan's supposed to show up"?

This time it's no rumor. Dylan is showing up for a very rare interview.

The site of this event is Il Cielo, a lovely Italian restaurant.

The soothing violin music can't block out memories of Don't Look Back," the 1967 documentary that included Dylan's razor-tongued evisceration of a hapless magazine reporter, or the more recent snippet in the Rolling Stone 20th Anniversary TV Special that showed Dylan bitterly complaining about fans who dare to personally approach him because his songs have touched them.

"That has nothin' to do with me," he griped.

Dylan doesn't make an entrance, he simply materializes, slipping in through the back entrance. He is polite, subdued, downright nervous about doing an interview. After settling in a chair, looks, checks around him like a skittish colt suddenly released into an unfamiliar corral. He puts the ubiquitous sunglasses on the table, quietly dismisses mineral water, accepts white wine, asks, "Will it bother you if I smoke?" Invited to go ahead, he takes out a pack of Salems. He says he quits occasionally. He sits forward and answers questions earnestly, looking directly at the interviewer with his big, blue eyes.

Dylan looks fit at 47, and he isn't slowing down. He's on his third tour in as many years, just released his seventh LP — Down in the Groove — in eight years and is already thinking of another for next year when he also hopes to tour the Soviet Union. He's also planning to launch a movie and TV production company.

It isn't surprising if he's a little tired, especially after just completing three high-energy, sell-out performances at Los Angeles' Greek Theatre. Since going on the road in June, Dylan is proving that, far from being over the hill, he's at the top of his form.

The tour has drawn critical raves and has been extended at least through Oct. 16-19, when he'll do a four-night stand at New York's Radio City Music Hall, his first performance at the legendary theater.

Backed by a five-piece rock band, Dylan has rejuvenated his classic material, resurrecting such timeless gems as "Boots of Spanish Leather," "The Times They Are A-Changin'" and "Masters of War."

"When I'm singin' my songs, it never occurs to me that I wrote them," Dylan says.

"If I didn't have a song like "Masters of War," I'd find a song like "Masters of War" to sing. Same thing with "Times They are A-Changin'." If I didn't have a song like that, I'd go out and look around and I'd search around until I found one like that, you know?"

There's a line in "Masters of War" about being afraid to bring children into the world. Dylan, now divorced, has five.

"I don't sing that line," he jokes. "I love children. I was always taught that if you were blessed to have them, you just had more of them. They're protection from the world."

His eldest daughter just married. The rebel voice of the 1960s is — sigh — nearing 50.

"I wouldn't mind being a grandfather, or a great-grandfather for that matter," he says, "but I don't know if that has anything to do with age. I know people in their 30's who are grandparents."

When his children were young, he moved them from New York to Malibu, Calif., to protect them from the effects of fame and "so they could grow up in a little more country environment, at least hear the birds singing."

"There's just something instinctive that tells me that a man must support his family, no matter what. As it is, I'm doing what I do because I've been given to do it," he says.

"But most of the people who work 9 to 5 have got to support families, and there's a tremendous disregard for that. You don't see much of that being heralded with heroic words and fancy awards. But that's what makes the world either rise or fall, that commitment to family."

The lead song on Down in the Groove — the Wilbert Harrison blues song, "Let's Stick Together" — echoes that sentiment: "It might be tough for a while, you might consider the child. Cannot be happy without his mom and his pappy, let's stick together . . . "

The album surprised some critics because it is mostly covers of other composers' songs. There are only two Dylan originals, plus two collaborations with Grateful Dead songwriter Robert Hunter, including the single "Silvio."

Dylan said he picked the other material because he liked it. Down in the Groove establishes Dylan as a recording artist and arranger with the strength of style to transcend the source of the material.

"There's no rule that claims that anyone must write their own songs," he says. "And I do. I write a lot of songs. But so what, you know? You could take another song somebody else has written and you can make it yours. I'm not saying I made a definitive version of anything with this last record, but I liked the songs. Every so often you've gotta sing songs that're out there. You just have to, just to keep yourself straight."

In the past few years, he's concentrated on touring — with the Grateful Dead, Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers, now with this pared-down band that has Dylan alone out front most of the time, performing selections from the vast catalog of an almost 30-year career. Nobody would blame him for just putting his feet up for a while.

"I really don't have anyplace to put my feet up," he laughs. "Well, we want to play 'cause we want to play. Why tour? It's just that you get accustomed to it over the years. The people themselves will tell you when to stop touring."

This tour has brought Dylan the critical praise that seems to elude him more than it does other artists. He seems to be held up to a higher standard because of his own bigger-than-life image, and that irritates him.

"It's irritating. It's real irritating," he says. "It's not that somebody can't come and not like what you're doing, that's OK. But I've done tours before where people got real personal with their reviews in a real early time when we were on the road, and for some reason all the towns that we were about to play, they'd like to pick these things up. So it was like intentionally telling people to stay away.

"I don't know. I go through a lot of that, and then even when you're not doing what they say you're doing, people expect to see that. It's like when we were playing after being booed in Newport or something (in 1965 he brought an electric band to the folk festival). I mean, for the next six months, people want to see that same show that got booed, and they want to boo, too."

He is interrupted: Does he have a request for the restaurant's violinist? Sure, he says,

"L.A. Rain." And anyone with a basic knowledge of musical talent probably would mistake the latter for none other than Lou Reed. I admit it. I did.

Now, the Avalanche has introduced its latest after more than a year of idleness, and what a surprise it has turned out to be. There's only seven songs, but each one has enough fire to illuminate the entire L.A. county.

By now, you're probably saying to yourself, "Shit. This guy's really getting off on this album." And you're damn right! This is the most impressive U.S. debut to come along in years.

With all this hype, I've almost forgotten to give you the title, In Rock. And that's exactly where the Avalanche has been during that dormant period — soaking their minds in a sound so pure and back to basics that it completely blows you away.

Take the single "Not Another Day." The guitar-work alone is enough to tear one away from this world and throw him into an avalanche of dreamland rock.

"Height of the Clouds, Parts I and 2" go a step further and bring one on the express elevator to the heavens above. Pretty wild, huh?

And "Darkorjan" and "Yesterday Once More" could satisfy even the most serious headbanger, while simultaneously giving the most hard-core death rocker and die-hard popster musical bliss.

The Rose of Avalanche have thrown a vinyl blanket of psychedelia over the ears and airwaves of America. My suggestion is to use it. Don't be left out in the cold.

Nephilim

grinding, gut-busting beat that made Dawnrazor such a treat to listen to has all but faded into the dust storm of their own creation.

Nevertheless, this isn't a bad album (say, as in the good, the bad, and the Nephilim). Nor is it a good album either. It's rather mediocre to say the least.

The sure strengths of The Nephilim come from a place I never would have suspected, the ballads. And fortunately, more than half of this album consists of ballads.

This is where the gloom and doom, moan and groan stuff comes across rather nicely. "Celebrate" is the strongest track of the eight with only Carl McCoy's scratchy voice and a bass line to accompany it. Sometimes simplicity is the only way to go.

The main problem with The Nephilim is that it tries too hard to scare the listener into an audio frenzy. Sometimes a simple "Boo" works just as well.

"Moonchild" is perhaps the only upbeat song without morbid pretensions. I can't say it'll lift the spirits to Nirvana but it does make for good listening.

Like I say, there's nothing wrong with the macabre in music. But seriously, we already have one holiday to spook it up.

Student Committee for the Arts

S.C.A. is run entirely by and for UCLA students and is responsible for:
- producing the best in unique live entertainment at venues all over campus.
- subsidizing tickets to UCLA Center for the Arts productions, making great seats available to students for only $6.
- funding UCLA student organizations presenting cultural programs and events on campus.

As a member of S.C.A., you will:
- share responsibility for managing a budget of over $200,000.
- take part in producing arts events on campus.
- gain an insider's perspective on the entertainment world.

If producing live shows sounds exciting to you, come by the S.C.A. office (downstairs in Royce Hall, room B96) and pick up an application. Membership positions are now open for UCLA Undergraduate and graduate students.

For more information call 825-3253/825-4403

Dylan

"Love Me or Leave Me."

Dylan's unexpected tastes and perspectives often perplex his public, though he insists he doesn't know why he would be called "enigmatic."

"I don't know what that word means," he protests.

"I would like to think that I couldn't be categorized. Who wants to be categorized? That happens because of all the stuff I do, not because of who I am or anything. And I don't even know if that's a true fact because that's nothing much to concern me. You can't make it too long on being an enigma."

If his critics can't categorize him, they certainly can't accuse him of playing it safe. He seems to depend on literary and spiritual references that keep him constantly searching for new influences.

He stunned fans in 1979 with the emotional, gospel LP Slow Train Coming. The lead song "Gotta Serve Somebody" won him his only Grammy, an honor he considers "an accident." The album was one of Dylan's strongest ever and went platinum (1 million copies sold).

"Gospel music is about the love of God. And commercial music is about the love of sex," Dylan says.

After following up with Saved and Shot of Love, Dylan, who was born Jewish, seemed to drift away from the Christian message, though themes of redemption tinged Infidels and Empire Burlesque.

His current religious leanings are the object of speculation. "Religion has nothing to do with faith," is all he'll say publicly on the subject. But another of his gospel songs, "Death Is Not the End," turned up on Down in the Groove.

So did the Tin Pan Alley tune "When Did You Leave Heaven?" And at a recent concert he delighted the crowd by bursting into "I'm in the Mood for Love."

Last year, he appeared on a PBS tribute to George Gershwin. He was surprised when the producers invited him to participate. "I said, 'Are you sure? You sure there might not be another Bob Dylan?' "

Dylan has always been intrigued by Gershwin's music, he says, "'cause it sounds like sophisticated city stuff, but there's a country, backwood, alley cat element to it that for some reason he was able to capture.

Folk songs have an honored place in Dylan's current repertoire, a purposeful homage to his roots. He plays the standards "Barbara Allen" and "Golden Vanities" on stage, and included his own arrangement of "Shenandoah" on Down in the Groove.

Earlier this year, he was inducted into the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame. His "Like a Rolling Stone" is the anthem of the rock generation. But folk music is in his heart; he contributed a cut to a recent LP honoring Leadbelly and Woody Guthrie.

Born Robert Zimmerman in Minnesota — he later legally changed his name — Dylan migrated to New York in part to visit Guthrie in the hospital. He soon became a sensation playing his songs of biting social commentary in Greenwich Village coffee houses. But he infuriated folk purists when he took up the electric guitar by the mid-'60s.

BRUIN CLASSIFIED 825-2221

ASTRO•GRAPH

Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

Lots of new activities and moving around are in the offing in the year ahead. Numerous short trips are likely, as well as one of long duration.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Today, work closely with people who can now help advance your self-interests. Keep at arm's length those who can't be of assistance. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Friends will be willing to go out of their way to help you today, provided you don't make them feel they are obligated to do so. Be grateful, not grumpy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you attend a social gathering today, try to spread yourself around instead of being attentive to certain people while ignoring others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Possibilities for achieving your objectives look good today, but you must be careful that your goals are attained in a manner that will not aggravate others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Today, if possible, try to avoid the company of a person whose views are always diametrically opposed to your own. Your tolerance level is lower than usual and sparks might result.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Financial conditions may be a mixed bag today. Your chances for gains and losses are equally balanced. The scale could be tipped in either direction.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Try to give those with whom you'll be involved today the benefit of the doubt. If you are arrogant or demanding, they may behave in ways to spite you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Guard against tendencies to make things harder than they are. The secret to success is to operate along the lines of least resistance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Inclinations to overindulge or be extravagant could be prevalent in your attitude today. Treat both your waistline and your purse with respect.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It will prove unwise today to leave something of importance undone that can easily be dispatched now. It might be twice as hard to do tomorrow.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) People who disagree with you today may not necessarily dislike you, it's just that they might not care for your ideas or the way you present them. Don't take it personally.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You might have an opportunity to add to your resources today, but don't look for it to come from an area that hasn't provided dividends in the past.

blockers up against a Trojan hitter, USC will be at a disadvantage.

Freshman outside hitter Jenny Evans, Shaver and Tomkus will probably be the major attackers tonight. Evans, who has played inconsistently in the past few matches, has one of the strongest hitting arms in the Pac-10 when she plays aggressively. Evans showed the California team that she has the ability to go through a block rather than placing a junk shot. By remaining aggressive against USC, Evans has the power to disrupt the Trojan offense by forcing them to play a more conservative defense.

single to right field. Gibson, who led the Dodgers with 25 home runs, then hit a drive into the right-field seats to chase Fernandez.

Fernandez, who won his last six games to finish 12-10, allowed seven hits and six runs in five-plus innings. During the season, he was 8-4 at home with a 1.83 earned-run average.

Fernandez was given a start in the playoffs because of an injury to Bob Ojeda, whose left middle finger was almost severed in a gardening accident 10 days before the end of the season.

The Mets got back in the game in the fifth when Howard Johnson led off with a single to snap an 0-for-14 streak in this series and 0-for-22 overall in postseason competition. The slump tied pitcher George Earnshaw's mark for postseason futility.

Wally Backman followed with an infield single and, one out later, Dykstra homered into the right-field bullpen.

New York chased Belcher in the eighth. Dykstra led off with a double and scored on Jefferies' single, his seventh hit in 19 at-bats in the series. Left-hander Ricky Horton relieved Belcher and struck out Keith Hernandez, then yielded a single to Darryl Strawberry and right-hander Brian Holton was called in to face Kevin McReynolds.

McReynolds hit a slow grounder to short and Jefferies was called out when the ball hit him as he ran to third. McReynolds was credited with a single, but the out cost the Mets a scoring opportunity. Gary Carter ended the inning by flying to left.

Holton pitched the ninth for the save.

The Dodgers used seven pitchers in Game 4, including 23-game winner Orel Hershiser, who got the final out. Hershiser warmed up in the bullpen in the eighth, when the Mets threatened.

Monday's game was the second for the Dodgers without their relief ace, Jay Howell, who was suspended for three days after being ejected from Saturday's game for having pine tar on his glove. The suspension was reduced on Monday by a day, making Howell available for Game 6.

Clips sign 7-8 center

The Associated Press

POMONA, Calif.— Even in the NBA, where 7-footers are common, there's never been anyone like George Bell.

At 7-foot-8, Bell is the tallest player ever to be on an NBA roster. He got his second chance to earn a job in the league last week when he signed as a free agent with the Los Angeles Clippers. Bell, 30, was with the Washington Bullets during training camp in 1983.

Bell's road to the Clippers was a circuitous one. He last played with the Los Angeles Magicians, a basketball and comedy troupe similiar to the Harlem Globetrotters, in 1984 and 1985. But injuries, illness and problems with his agent kept Bell from continuing in basketball.

"I went through a depressing stage," Bell said at the Clippers' training camp at Cal Poly Pomona. "By going through that crisis, I wasn't mentally into the sport, and I gave it up in a way."

Bell then went to Durham, N.C., where he worked for the North Carolina Council on Juvenile Deliquency.

"After working there three years, I decided to pursue basketall again," Bell said. "The first step was to get physically fit again. I trained on my own from 6 a.m. to noon for three years, lifting weights and jogging."

The program allowed Bell to bulk up from 270 pounds to 302 pounds. Bell also found a new agent, Frank Catapano, who represents 7-7 Manute Bol, the tallest player in NBA history. Catapano then had Bell scrimmage in Boston with members of Harvard's team.

"He saw I had potential and made some calls around the NBA," Bell said. "A few teams were interested, and the Clippers were one of them."

Last Monday, Bell worked out for General Manager Elgin Baylor and Director of Scouting Barry Hecker.

"Who wouldn't be interested in a guy 7-8?" Baylor said. "I'd like to see a guy 7-8 even if he didn't play basketball."

Baylor believes Bell has advantages over two other tall players who initially were scoffed at when they entered the NBA — Bol and Utah's 7-4 Mark Eaton — but also has more obstacles to overcome.

"He's more coordinated than Eaton or Manute, but they had experience on their side and they were younger," Baylor said. "But that's not to say he won't deliver."

Bell's height is a result of an over-secreted ruptured pituitary gland, which has caused many health problems, including loss of eyesight and joint problems.

Bell began his collegiate career with Morris Brown College in Atlanta in 1977-78, playing three years before transferring to Cal-Riverside in 1980. He sat out the 1980-81 season before transferring to Biola University in La Mirada, Calif., where he averaged five points in 24 games. He then joined the Harlem Wizards for the 1982-83 season.

Even with his height, Bell admits he is a longshot to make the woeful Clippers, but still expects to play professional basketball this season. Bell said he wouuld join the Albany (N.Y.) Patroons of the Continenal Basketball Association if he fails to earn a spot with the Clippers.

Dodgers take 3-2 NLCS lead

By JIM DONAGHY
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Rookie Tim Belcher won his second game of the playoffs and Kirk Gibson hit his second straight game-winning homer as Los Angeles beat the New York Mets 7-4 in Game 5 on Monday to move within one game of their first National League pennant since 1981.

The teams now fly to Los Angeles, where the Dodgers can wrap up the best-of-seven series Tuesday when former Met Tim Leary opposes David Cone, the losing pitcher in Game 2.

During the regular season, the Mets won 10 of 11 games from the Dodgers and won 56 games at home, including their last 11 at Shea Stadium. But the Dodgers came into New York to win two of three and take a 3-2 lead.

The Dodgers won Game 4 in 12 innings on Gibson's homer shortly before 1 a.m. EDT. A little less than 12 hours later, the two teams were back on the field for the fifth game with the series tied at two games apiece.

The Mets and Dwight Gooden were three outs away from taking a 3-1 lead in the series when Mike Scioscia tied the score with a two-run homer.

Gibson, who ended a 1-for-16 slump with his game-winning homer in Game 4, hit a three-run shot in the fifth inning for his second homer in a little over 12 hours.

With two outs in the ninth, Gibson beat out an infield hit, then appeared to reinjure his left hamstring stealing second and left the game. Jose Gonzalez ran for Gibson and scored the Dodgers' seventh run when Mike Marshall tripled to right-center.

In all five games, the Dodgers have scored first, this time breaking through for three runs off loser Sid Fernandez in the fourth inning on 39-year-old Rick Dempsey's two-run double and an RBI double by Alfredo Griffin.

Belcher, who won Game 2, set down nine straight before Len Dykstra led off with a walk in the fourth and Gregg Jefferies singled.

Belcher, who won nine of his last 11 decisions, allowed seven hits and struck out six as he became the first rookie to win two games in the playoffs since the format was adopted in 1969.

In Game 2, Belcher allowed five hits in 8 1-3 innings as the Dodgers beat the Mets 6-3.

Marshall led off the fourth with a single and, after a walk to John Shelby, Dempsey doubled down the left-field line on a high fastball.

Dempsey was signed as a non-roster player last spring by the Dodgers after hitting .177 for Cleveland in 1987. He missed the last half of 1987 after suffering a broken thumb in a collision at home plate with Kansas City's Bo Jackson.

As a catcher for Baltimore in 1983, Dempsey was the World Series MVP and is 20-for-61 in 21 postseason games.

Griffin, a .167 batter hitting right-handed, followed Dempsey's hit with a double to left-center field.

Steve Sax led off the fifth with a single and moved to third on Mickey Hatcher's hit-and-run tually got the second tally.

Lurking just behind the Cal defense, Fernandez stole a poor back pass, dribbled around Simi and virtually walked the ball into the net just a minute and a half later.

"All season long we worked on that (reading the back pass), and it finally worked," stated Schmid.

Fernandez almost had a second goal to his credit, but a Cal defender made a valiant save on the goal line off of a direct free kick just outside of the penalty area.

John Purzycki got the third goal at 31:36, an important goal for the Bruins, who were now "tied" with the Huskies.

J.B. Frost and Fernandez set up the Purzycki header, which was the senior defender's first goal in NCAA action.

"In practice we worked on that flick header. I'm happy the goal finally came," admitted Purzycki.

With a 3-0 halftime lead, the Bruins had 45 minutes to get that fourth goal and hence the title.

That fourth tally never came, but it wasn't due to a lack of effort.

Roosen just missed a volley with new Cal goalie Steve Gilliam away from his mark early on.

Then Gilliam made a great save on an Aaron Muth header, and a final Thompson shot with two minutes left hit the post.

On the other end, Nistl and the Bruin defense kept the Cal chances few and far between. UCLA's swarming and aggressive style of defense did more to hurt the Bear attack than anything else, even though the Bears had more experience on the crowned artificial turf surface that they call home in Memorial Stadium.

In fact, the only threatening shot of note came from Charlie Engs in the second half—his 18-yard rocket flying over the top of the Bruin cage.

So, regardless of the official decision, the Bruins appeared a far different team leaving than the one that departed from Los Angeles Friday morning.

"We played with great effort this weekend," summed up Schmid.

"Two wins. . . We took care of business."

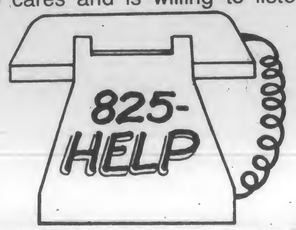
WHAT IS THE UCLA HELPLINE?

Founded in 1971, the UCLA Helpline was developed to serve both the campus and surrounding community as a crisis-intervention, general information, and referral hotline.
Helpline exists as a tool for callers working through various difficulties. Therefore, it operates with a nonjudgemental attitude in a highly confidential setting.

Not all people have life threatening troubles. They may be very lonely, frustrated, depressed, stressed by school pressures, or have roommate or relationship difficulties. The purpose of Helpline is to offer guidance and support when other services on campus are closed. Helpline allows callers to share their concerns with someone who cares and is willing to listen.

Call:



Monday through Friday, 5:00 pm to 12:00 midnight
Saturday and Sunday, 8:00 pm to 12:00 midnight

HOW CAN YOU GET INVOLVED?

HELPLINE TRAINING

Helpline counselors are a carefully selected group of volunteer UCLA students, faculty, and staff members who have been specially trained to handle the diversity of calls which the line receives. The outcome of this extensive training is a cohesive group of sensitive, committed people who act as guides and supports to individuals calling for help and counseling.

Training includes lectures on crisis intervention principles pertaining to relevant subjects such as drugs, sexual problems, suicide, loneliness and depression, and simulated role plays of potential calls.

Training for this quarter begins
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12
6:00 pm to 9:00 pm
HAINES HALL, ROOM 39

it. I think it's (the pressure) something we're going to have to prepare for. They make some big plays by doing that, but we're going to make some big plays.''

The ''big play'' is something a lot of people we're wondering about after the UCLA first quarter. UCLA, with its highly explosive offense, ran more of a conservative offense then the Air Aikman which many people expect.

''Our offense is not based on the big play,'' explained Aikman. ''We want to be consistent and just move the chains. I don't think we're conservative—we run the ball well, and we throw the ball well.''

Moving the ball is something that has become Aikman's trademark in his season and a half as a Bruin. Although he coughed up the ball twice and even tossed a couple of interceptions, Aikman didn't hurt his Heisman chances. His four touchdowns moved him second on the all-time UCLA career list. With 31 in just 17 games, he only trails Tom Ramsey, who in four years totaled 50.

Speaking of the Heisman Trophy, Aikman is listed No. 1 in this week's Sporting News Heisman Watch and in the latest Scripps-Howard Heisman Trophy poll, he received eight of 10 first place votes (no one else had more than one) and 46 of the 50 possible points (the next was 26 points).

On defense, UCLA has had a few holes to fill. Senior linebacker Eric Smith is still suffering from the concussion he received in the Nebraska game.

Donahue explained that ''He suffered a very serious concussion against Nebraska. Since that time, he's had a series of headaches and visual problems. All the test have been negative except the visual tests. He will not be cleared for action until the fuzziness goes away.

Another Bruin who has been plagued by injuries this year is sophomore tailback Brian Brown, who has not seen any action this year because of an ankle injury. But Donahue expects Brown to return this week.

''Brown is expected to workout with the team this week, and is expected to return versus Cal.''

Donahue explained that he will return kicks with Shawn Wills and handle the ball as well. He did not give the specific rotation of his three outstanding tailbacks (Eric Ball, Wills and Brown).

Donahue said that it is a problem of dividing the time between Ball, Wills and Brown, ''but that's a nice problem to have. Kind of like having a million dollars and deciding how to figure out your income tax.''

When looking at this week's match-up, Donahue said, ''Cal looks like the rest of the Pac-10: awfully good,'' Donahue said. This week is not only big for the Bruins as it is a tough road game, but if all things go as hoped for (that is, if Notre Dame beats Miami in South Bend), UCLA could climb into the No. 1 spot.

''I know when you're a high-ranked team, your gonna take the best shot from everyone. I am certain that Washington gave us their best, as did Oregon State. So will Cal. But Miami has to do that every week, and so does Notre Dame.

''But I have only a casual interest in that game,'' Donahue grinned. ''But I have more than a casual interest in the game at Strawberry Canyon.''

Weekend extends women's streak

Soccer goes 1-0-1

By Wendy Witherspoon
Staff Writer

On the road last weekend, the UCLA women's soccer team extended its no-goals-allowed streak. This two-game weekend included match-ups at Fresno State and Cal Poly SLO.

The Bruins showed up at Fresno State Saturday and trounced the Bulldogs on their own turf, 10-0. ''In the first half, we took them apart,'' said women's soccer coach Afshin Ghotbi. ''I put in all my starters in the first half and, with a score of 5-0 at halftime, was able to put in my second string in the second half,'' he said.

Two hat tricks were among what Ghotbi called ''some really beautiful goals.'' Together, senior forward Kris Fontana and senior defender Mary Haupt accounted for six of the ten goals scored. Haupt's hat trick was the first of her UCLA career.

Other goal scorers were senior midfielders Kristen Loskutoff and Pam England, sophomore forward Britt Olson and sophomore midfielder Kirsten Pinnell.

After Saturday's victory, the Bruins headed up Sunday to meet the Mustangs at Cal Poly SLO. Ghotbi had predicted that his team would have to play very well in this match-up.

According to Ghotbi, the Bruins dominated the game, but in the face of many adverse factors, they could not pull ahead.

The game, originally slated for 1 p.m., was delayed an hour due to the absence of referees.

''In the first half, we had difficulty finding our gear,'' Ghotbi said. ''For the first 30 minutes, they were all over us, they played a very fast-paced game,'' he said.

After a defensively strong first half in which no goals were scored, the Bruins came off the field at halftime to change their strategy.

Ghotbi said the Bruins really dominated the second half. ''For the first five minutes we played poorly, then it was all us,'' he said. However, adversity would strike again.

With 15 minutes left in the game, sophomore defender Lisa Vanderberg was controlling the ball when, according to Ghotbi, her jersey was grabbed by an aggressive Mustang. ''She (Vanderberg) turned to slap the girl's hand away, and the ref gave her a red card,'' Ghotbi said.

Consequently, the Bruins had to hold Cal Poly with a 10-woman team. But, again, bad luck would head their way.

Five minutes after Vanderberg received her red card, England went into a tackle from behind, and, without further adieu (or previous warning), the referee issued Vanderberg the second Bruin red card of the game. With 10 minutes left in the game, there were nine Bruins left on the field to hold the Mustangs.

''We still dominated the game,'' said Ghotbi. ''It looked like we were all over them.'' Yet when the whistle blew, the game ended with no goals scored by either side, and a tired Bruin team was looking at a 20-minute overtime.

''I gave them a challenge going into overtime,'' said Ghotbi. Putting Fontana and Olson up front for speed, he challenged the nine-woman team not only to hold the Mustangs to nil but also to make opportunities to score.

The Bruins took this challenge and literally played themselves into the ground for it. Haupt injured her knee 15 minutes into overtime and hobbled around for the last five minutes. She had to be carried off the field.

Senior goalkeeper Donna Morris lived up to the challenge, making 23 saves.

The game ended, however, in a 0-0 tie, putting the Bruins' overall record at 4-0-1 and regular season at 3-0-1 (Fresno State is not a regular season game).

''We should feel happy about the game. We only had nine players, and we continued to dominate,'' said Ghotbi. ''We should have won Sunday. We couldn't put it together and we couldn't score.''

Due to their red cards, key starters Vanderberg and England will be on the bench this weekend when San Diego State comes to UCLA. The Bruins will be fired up for a revenge match, as they lost to SDSU in a controversial game last year. The game will be played Saturday at 1 p.m. on the North Athletic Field.

What's in a goal? A tourney title

Soccer denied by a technical ruling

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

BERKELEY— Only an official's decision kept the UCLA men's soccer team from earning the "official" Pac-10 Championship.

By virtue of defeating host California, 3-0, on Sunday, the Bruins completed the Pacific Coast Soccer Classic with an unblemished 2-0 record.

However, Washington also went 2-0, defeating Cal, 1-0, and Stanford, 5-2, which meant that the Huskies and Bruins were tied, record-wise.

The first tie-breaking criterion used by the tournament officials was goal differential, which again saw both teams tied.

It was only the fact that Washington scored six goals to UCLA's four that gave the 1988 title to the Huskies.

So, even though the new 'Just say no' defensive attitude of the Bruins did just that—evidenced by the two shutouts—the Bruins were relegated to second place.

But that didn't seem to damper the spirits of a rejuvenated squad, which is now 7-4-1 overall.

"We got two wins, so we have to be happy," said Sigi Schmid, Bruin head coach.

Although they did not take the championship trophy, the Bruins swept the most valuable player honors and placed three players on the all-tournament team.

Goalkeeper Anton Nistl, the backbone of the 'Just say no' cause, earned the most valuable defender honor, while Billy Thompson, with two goals and one assist in weekend competition, took the offensive honor. Midfielder Ray Fernandez (1g, 2a) joined Nistl and Thompson on the all-tournament squad.

Thompson wasted little time in scoring both of his goals. The first came at 2:30 into the Stanford match, and against Cal, he made it happen even quicker.

Actually, it was Fernandez who made things happen, knocking a ball through to Fabrizio Luppi on the left sideline.

Luppi's ensuing cross found the 5'3" Thompson heading the ball home past a helpless Matt Simi with only 1:10 elapsed in the contest.

Aware that four goals were needed to win the title outright, the Bruins' offensive attack was inspired by the early scoring success.

Cobi Jones and Chris Roosen almost combined for the second goal at the 15:00 mark, but it was Mr. Fernandez who even-

Polo rebounds from USC heartbreak

Bruin Invite eases woes

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

After capturing its first 16 games of the year, the men's water polo team could conceivably have had a tough time bouncing back from Saturday's heartbreaking 10-9 loss to USC. In their first home appearance of the year, however, the Bruins showed their determination by easily taking both their games at Sunday's Bruin Invitational.

Little was known of Sunday's first opponent, Canadian club champion British Columbia, but UCLA quickly established its dominance by taking a 6-1 lead after the first quarter. Senior Scott Leonard tossed in a pair to lead the five Bruins who scored in the period.

In the second, play became increasingly sloppy, as both squads had trouble finding the net. B.C. closed the gap slightly, but UCLA retained a 7-3 halftime edge. Senior Hank Peterson scored the lone goal of the quarter for the Bruins and his second of the game.

UCLA got serious in the third, when it put the contest away by tallying five times on two goals by senior Fernando Carsalade and junior Mark Maretzki's second and Leonard's third goal of the game. Leading 12-4 at the beginning of the fourth, the Bruins kept up the attack, firing in four more, including Leonard's fourth goal of the match, to win, 16-5. Goalkeeper Dan Hackett did a nice job in the cage for UCLA in the final period.

In their second and final game of the invitational, the heavily favored Bruins faced Claremont-McKenna and, as expected, pounded the less experienced team, 21-4. Junior Kurt Fry and freshman K.C. Nowak led all scorers with three goals each, while Maretzki and juniors Donn Yamada and Vince Herron had two each. UCLA was able to take its starters out after only one period in the lopsided contest.

Despite the impressive numbers posted by the Bruins on Sunday, UCLA head coach Bob Horn was still looking for explanations for Saturday's performance. "SC played a very good game; we didn't play as good as we're capable, and we lost by one," said Horn, who is demanding that his team play up to its potential. "We need to really be a killer. No mercy whatsoever. No mercy."

In other invitational action, USC defeated both Claremont and B.C., by scores of 19-4 and 15-10, respectively.

The Bruins will look to further their success this weekend when they travel north to face Stanford on Friday and Cal on Saturday, just before the football game.

Spikers put No. 1 ranking on the line

Volleyball battles No. 11 USC

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

After winning 13 straight games and claiming the top ranking in the nation, the UCLA women's volleyball team will travel to the inner-city haven of cross-town rival USC in a Pac-10 conference match-up.

Victories over the defending national champions the University of Hawaii and defending Pac-10 champions Stanford University pale in comparison to the meeting between the volleyball powerhouses tonight in SC's Men's gym. Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski will square off against Trojan leader Chuck Erbe. In 58 meetings between the two teams, UCLA leads the series 30-28. However, when playing at USC, the Bruins hold a dismal 7-9 record.

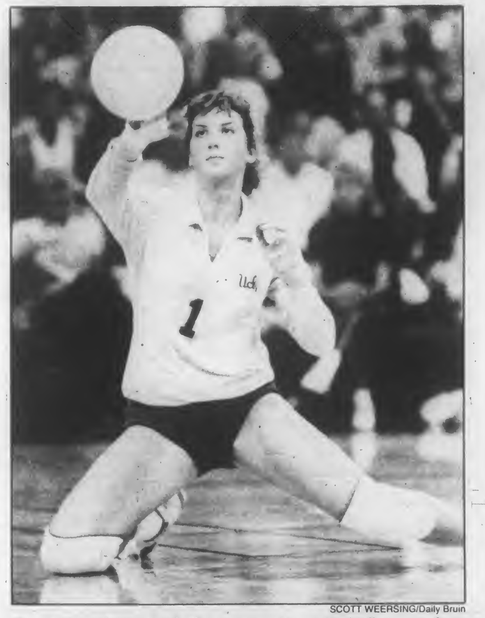
The key to the victory for the Bruins tonight will rest on the shoulders of senior setter Ann Boyer and junior middle blocker Daiva Tomkus. Along with sophomore outside hitter Samantha Shaver and junior outside hitter Jenny Crocker (who is questionable tonight due to from bronchitis), Tomkus and Boyer are the only veterans who have played against USC before in hostile conditions.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Hillary Malloy gets a dig against CSUN.

According to Boyer, the biggest asset of the USC game may also be its biggest downfall. "They run a lot of complicated plays in order to confuse the blockers," said Boyer. If run correctly, USC, with its powerful hitting attack, is a difficult team to stop offensively. However, more often than not, according to Boyer, the Trojan players are confused themselves in running their plays. In its most recent performance against Arizona State Sunday night, USC was able to pull out a win against the Sun Devils, while hitting over .300 in its offensive attack. The night before in Arizona was a different story. The 20th-ranked Wildcats shut down the Trojans in four games. Inconsistency may be the key word in describing SC's roller-coaster season to date. At 12-4 overall and 4-2 in the Pac-10, the 11th-ranked Trojans have lost key matches to teams that they should have beaten.

The key to a UCLA victory rests on the play of setter Boyer. If she runs a strong, well-proportioned and diverse offensive attack, the Trojans' blocking game will not be able to shut down the strong hitting ability of UCLA's outside hitters and middle blockers. The defensive blocking duties will rest on the play of middle blocker Tomkus. As the veteran net player on the team as well as the team's leading blocker, Tomkus will be responsible for coordinating the blocking game.



SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Traci Broadway and the women's volleyball team face arch-rival Southern Cal tonight at USC.

Bruins prepare for Cal

By David Gibson
Assistant Sports Editor

After a tough but decisive 38-21 victory over a surprisingly good Oregon State team, the UCLA football team has to regroup a little and focus its attention on the upcoming game at Cal.

At the beginning of the season, many speculated that Cal would be the most improved team in the conference and, with a favorable schedule, could even be an undefeated 5-0 going into the Bruin match-up.

But what has happened? Cal, who was even predicted to be the fifth best team in the Pac-10 by the Daily Bruin staff writers poll, was upset by Oregon State in a controversial game and last weekend was pummeled by Washington State, 42-17.

So UCLA is 5-0, and Cal is 3-2, with Cal's only victories over powerhouses Pacific, Kansas and San Jose St. But did the Bruins look that good against the Beavers? Is head coach Terry Donahue satisfied with the outcome after building a 21-0 first quarter lead?

"We are delighted to win our second conference game and go to 5-0," Donahue said. "Oregon State is a good and improved team. They don't have any quit in them. It was hard for us to really believe it (their improvement), but after playing them I do believe it."

DAN MacMEDAN/Daily Bruin

Terry Donahue and his Bruins ran their conference record to 2-0.

One problem that Donahue stated the team must address is the lack of protection that quarterback Troy Aikman got in the OSU game.

"We have to learn about handling the heat on our quarterback," Donahue said. "Cal will bring a lot of heat on our quarterback. I am certain they will test us on whether we can protect him. But Troy really is a warrior. He took some licks."

Aikman felt that the high number of sacks, four, had to be attributed to the whole offensive unit. "They were bringing a lot of blitzes. They were getting in some shots." He said that he had the usual bumps and bruises, but wasn't too sore."

When asked about the suspect play of the offensive line, Aikman said, "They're (the line) doing the best job they can. They (the Beavers) were bringing a lot of people. Its all part of

Wahler reinstated

Jim Wahler, UCLA's starting nose guard, who missed last Saturday's 38-21 win over Oregon State after head coach Terry Donahue suspended him for his controversial remarks in the Los Angeles Times and another undisclosed violation of team rules, has been reinstated for this Saturday's game at California.

Wahler, who made comments regarding his displeasure with the coaching decision to switch him from defensive tackle to nose guard and some rather harsh remarks about USC football and the annual game between the Bruins and the Trojans, met with Donahue on Monday and, apparently, settled his differences with the coach.

"I really don't have an axe to grind," Donahue said at his luncheon Monday before he met with Wahler. "I anticipate that he will come back to the football team and be back in the starting line-up."

Defensive tackle Jim Wahler will return to the UCLA lineup against Cal.

DEBATE '88 UCLA

DAVID LIPSEY

Workers complete the transformation of Pauley Pavilion into an arena for Thursday night's debate between presidential hopefuls Michael Dukakis and George Bush.

Debate demands stringent security

Site to be sealed, Secret Service to stalk campus

By M. Radevich
Staff Writer

This time tomorrow morning, Pauley Pavilion will be sealed off, UCPD officers will be roaming the campus, and grown men in three-piece suits will be talking to their sleeves.

The Secret Service, equipped with concealed sleeve microphones, along with campus police and a private security company, will be there to make Pauley Pavilion safe for the presidential debates tomorrow night.

Besides sealing of the Pavilion, few details have been released about what security measures are being taken.

UCPD has been in meetings with the Commission for Presidential Debates, which is sponsoring the event, and the Secret Service since Monday, and are unavailable for comment. Staffpro, the private security team, doesn't know any specifics. And the Secret Service isn't telling.

"Most of the details are still being worked out at this time," said Harlan Lebo, a UCLA public information officer. "All we know for sure is that Pauley and its perimeters will be closed off. The Secret Service and UCPD are working together and LAPD isn't involved — at least not yet."

The Secret Service cannot give out any information regarding manpower, methods, equipment, or costs, said William Corbett, spokesman for the agency. "After all, speaking of our procedures would be self-defeating," he said.

Corbett added, "Generally what we do is go to the local authorities, such as your college security and administration, and work out proper security measures. We think of any possible scenario and then make sure that security measures are put in place.

Debate poses minor inconveniences

Some parking restricted, staff to leave early

By Shana Chandler, Staff Writer

As preparations continue for Thursday night's presidential debate, UCLA gears up for the temporary inconveniences expected to accompany the event.

Some UCLA staff members will be asked to leave work early, and access to two parking structures will be limited Thursday afternoon.

Although classes will continue as scheduled and libraries will remain open, many staff members will be released on administrative leave with pay at 3:30 p.m. on Thursday in order to "minimize traffic and parking concerns," Executive Vice Chancellor Murray Schwartz announced in a statement yesterday.

Only those staff members whose duties are deemed "critical to campus operations" will remain, Schwartz wrote.

Parking attendants will be on hand in greater numbers than average, according to Assistant Chancellor John Sandbrook. Schwartz's statement confirmed that entry into parking structures 4 and 6 will be restricted after 1 p.m. — except for those with special debate parking permits.

The areas around the James West Center and the J.D. Morgan Center will also be restricted at 1 p.m.

Miller Beer and UCLA don't mix.

Last week a Miller Beer poster promoting UCLA football appeared as an insert in the Daily Bruin. The poster violated UCLA trademark rights and California state law, according to UCLA licensing director Jack Revoyr.

The poster distribution resulted from an oversight in the Daily Bruin Advertising office. UCLA and the Bruin Bear are trademarks, and they generally do not appear in advertisements in the Daily Bruin, said Tiley Chao, Daily Bruin business manager.

Gunman's shots kill two

By May Wong
Staff Writer

A gunman allegedly shot and killed two people yesterday at approximately 5:30 p.m. in the Westside area, and surrendered four hours later.

Armed with a handgun, the sniper fatally shot a female victim in front of a 1671 Federal Avenue apartment complex.

Shots were still being fired as LAPD officers arrived at the scene, after responding to a call of assault with a deadly weapon.

Running to take cover in the Federal Ave. building, the sniper encountered a male, whom he shot several times, according to Captain Maurice Moore of LAPD's West Los Angeles Division. The male victim was brought to the UCLA Medical Center and died shortly thereafter, LAPD Sgt. John Gambill said.

After shooting the male, the

NOMMO founders reminisce

Sensitive issues, controversy addressed

Editor's note: This article is the second in a three-part series about the 20th anniversary of the UCLA's black student newsmagazine, NOMMO.

By Shodja Kargari, Contributor

The idea of a black student newspaper was a sensitive issue on the UCLA campus back in 1967. After almost a year of negotiating between UCLA students and administrators, the concept of NOMMO was approved by the ASUCLA Communications Board.

Since its inception, NOMMO has not shied away from controversial and difficult subject matter. "NOMMO will be an instrument for giving currency to the Black power movement — a movement which has been distorted by the insensitivity of the white news media and, indeed, by white America," wrote NOMMO's first editorial board in its premiere issue on Dec. 4, 1968.

J. Daniel "Skip" Johnson, a former UCLA undergraduate, Black Student Union (BSU) chairman, graduate student, AAP counselor, and now president of UCLA Black Alumni, has been on this campus for most of the last 20 years. "The Black power movement was about the most controversial issue to hit this campus in terms of student reaction," said Johnson.

Over the past 19 years, NOMMO has "given currency" to politically relevant issues concerning Afro-American students, according to its founders. The paper has fluctuated between communicating its messages through Associated Press releases, interviews with prominent figures, and investigative reporting to simply editorializing.

According to its founders, NOMMO's editorial board wrestled with the issue of promoting a political message within a newspaper.

Ardie Ivie, a key person in NOMMO's establishment and a former journalist and editor in New York and Seattle, contended that "the whole value of journalism in any setting is not that it's objective . . . but that it creates a safe harbor for ideas no matter how extreme to share a platform with other ideas no matter how conventional."

Ivie further articulated, "I don't expect objectivity (in journalism) . . . because to communicate you have to have intent which makes objectivity impossible."

Students behind the creation of NOMMO recognized that a paper of journalistic merit would help validate the Black point of view on

Volunteers reach across border to offer relief for Mexico's needy

Cheral, a volunteer from Spectrum, bathes a girl in the village of Grupo.

By W. Kevin Leung
City Editor

When people on this hill look around, they see dry dust on tractor-scarred lands. On the ground and in the air, neither water nor electricity flows. To the south, there is more barren land. But to the north, beyond a valley and a hill, they see the United States.

Most U.S. citizens see Mexico as a tourist attraction or as a game show prize for a lucky couple. But few see it closely enough to notice the falling economy and standard of living; even fewer are helping our neighbors south of the border.

"What we will show you is the real world," said Pastor Von Trutzschler, director of Spectrum Ministries in San Diego in August. The director was addressing a group of 15 new and returning volunteers, who were about to visit the people on the hill — a hill known as the "Dump."

"It'll be rough," the pastor said.

Spectrum began as a youth outreach program of the Clairemont Emmanuel Baptist Church 20 years ago and was formally consolidated into the Spectrum Ministries in 1981, Trutzschler said.

The volunteers bring donated food and used clothing to one of three sites almost every Thursday. In all, they serve about 400 children and their families in the towns of Grupo, Laguna and Pan Americano. Because the towns have no plumbing, water is brought in to bathe children.

Contributions of about $300 each week pay for miscellaneous expenses, said Irene Baldwin, a two-year veteran of the group.

Several younger volunteers made snowcones or set up simple games where the children competed for candy.

The children's parents work at a nearby trash dump collecting plastic, metals and other materials for recycling, Trutzschler said. They earn two to three dollars a day, but they are not dependent on Spectrum, the pastor stressed.

While Baldwin passed out food purchased in Mexico, a Mexican woman approached her and hugged her. Every time Spectrum arrives, Baldwin said, she and her husband bake fresh, soft bread for them to purchase.

The people Spectrum assists are very proud, Trutzschler said; and the group is only giving a little relief.

"Most college-age people think because they can't do everything, they do nothing," Trutzschler said. But if people can help another person from suffering, they should, he urged.

Spectrum Ministries is located at 3286 Erie Street in San Diego. For more information, contact the group at (619) 276-1385.

In Grupo, Mexico, Efren Lopez (above), who works for the relief group Spectrum, marks the hands of those waiting in line for food. Hand marking ensures the equal distribution of the food the organization buys, mostly fruit and vegetables brought in from Tijuana. At right, a young girl sitting with her friends in the dirt looks on.

At right, Maria Elena, a doctor who works part-time for Spectrum, examines a young patient in one of the organization's ministry vans near the town of Pan Americano, Mexico.

Above, a young boy in Grupo awaits a bath, a rarity in a village with no running water.

Lax security let foreign agents into weapons labs, say investigators

By Bryan Brumley, Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Lax security at Energy Department nuclear weapons laboratories has allowed agents from Iran, the Soviet bloc and other countries to gain access to sensitive research facilities, congressional investigators reported Tuesday.

The visits took place at the national laboratories at Los Alamos and Sandia in New Mexico and at Livermore in California, where scientists conduct advanced research on nuclear weapons and the Strategic Defense Initiative, known as Star Wars, according to the report by the General Accounting Office.

The foreign visitors included specialists from the Soviet bloc, China and nations believed either to have nuclear weapons or are seeking to develop them, including India, Pakistan, Israel, Brazil and Argentina.

Also allowed into the plants were visitors from Iran and Iraq, the report said.

Officials of the FBI and CIA declined to discuss possible espionage investigations stemming from the incidents and it was not clear whether any secrets had been lost, according to the report by the agency, the investigative arm of Congress.

Formally delivering the report to the Senate Governmental Operations Committee, the GAO's senior associate director, Keith Fultz, said that his inspectors "could not determine if sensitive or classified information has been lost" but added that "because of . . . weaknesses in DOE's foreign visitor controls, we have little confidence that adequate protection of weapons-related information and technology is achieved."

One member of the committee, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said that "there may be a strong possibility that we will today only be looking at the tip of a monstrous iceberg."

Ralliers decry FDA response to AIDS, surround headquarters

By Jerry Estill, Associated Press

ROCKVILLE, Md. — Hundreds of demonstrators angry with the federal government's response to the AIDS crisis effectively shut down the Food and Drug Administration's headquarters Tuesday.

Authorities had arrested at least 50 protesters by midmorning. Demonstration leaders said they were aiming for 300 arrests by early afternoon.

Scores of federal employees were stranded outside the sprawling 17-story building when Montgomery County police stopped letting workers inside at 7:30 a.m.

The FDA had planned for its 5,000 employees to arrive early and use a rear entrance. But a small band of demonstrators broke off from the main body of protesters at the building's main entrance and blocked the other three entrances.

Rather than trying to separate demonstrators from employees, police told the workers the building was closed. Two hours later, police officers at intersections near the building approached workers and told them the building was closed.

The arrest procedure was simple. Groups of a half-dozen or so protesters would sit down outside the main entrance at the feet of a line of police officers. When the officers actually handling the arrests completed processing one batch of arrestees, they would return to the entrance and make more arrests.

Programs for mentally ill homeless delivered little service, says report

The Associated Press

The county's program for the mentally ill homeless has paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to privately-run programs, but state reports show little or no services were delivered.

Reports to the state Department of Mental Health also showed some care providers charge more than 10 times the usual rate for counseling and other psychological services to the mentally ill homeless.

In one instance, county officials said they terminated a contract with a San Gabriel Valley provider in December after a more than one-year wait for a homeless-care program to get under way.

In another case, a facility in the south area of the city, which had provided only limited service for homeless clients, suddenly dropped its homeless program last summer after a dispute with the county.

Funding, however, was provided to the private facilities from the time contracts were supposed to take effect.

The disclosure of the lack of services comes while the county's Mental Health Department is under fire for alleged mismanagement of its more than $230 million budget.

Roberto Quiroz, director of the county Mental Health Department, has strongly defended his administration of the homeless program.

But Nathan Shappell, chairman of the state's watchdog agency the Little Hoover Commission,

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CAMPUS ON NIGHT LIGHTING

The need to provide adequate night lighting has been a primary concern of Facilities Management. In 1982 we sponsored "Night Walks" involving students, faculty and Campus Community Safety staff to identify problem areas and recommend solutions. Since those initial "Night Walks", Facilities Management has spent an average of $72,000 per year on night lighting projects. We will continue to do so until all of the dark areas have been identified and addressed.

In addition, Facilities Management has dedicated staff members who replace exterior bulbs from 3:00 to 11:30 pm, groundspersons who ensure that shrubs adjacent to walkways are not overgrown, and tree trimmers who keep branches from interfering with lighting.

But the commitment to improve campus night lighting is not restricted to Facilities Management:

- Chancellor Young actively supports efforts to correct night lighting deficiencies and over the past five years has approved funding totaling $500,000 for exterior lighting projects.
- The Campus Parking Service has invested approximately $600,000 in an on-going program to upgrade the lighting in parking structures and on surface lots.
- Capital Programs has undertaken a multi-year major lighting retrofit program to convert campus street lights from mercury vapor and incandescent lighting to high pressure sodium lighting.
- The Campus Housing Administrators continue to provide additional lighting in areas adjacent to the Residence Halls.

In spite of all of these efforts, we need your help!

- If you spot lights that have burned out, just call the Trouble Call Center (extension 5-8406) anytime of the day or night. These calls receive our highest priority.
- If you know of a particularly dark area along campus pathways, call Connee Freeman, Associate Director of Facilities Operations, at extension 6-6645, so that she can include it in the Annual Night Lighting Program.
- In the interim, for your own safety, please select well-lit pathways, even if they take a few extra minutes.
- Remember, Campus Community Safety Department's Escort Program is there to assist. Just call extension 5-1493.

With your cooperation, we can provide a safe, supportive campus environment. We want to hear from you!

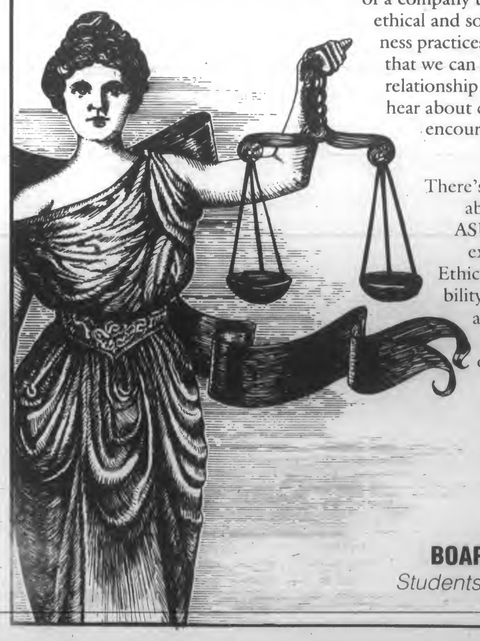
HELP US CHANGE THE WORLD

ASUCLA thinks business should have a conscience. Over the years, we've tried to be a force for positive social change, to take stands that reflect the ethical values of our campus community.

In 1974, ASUCLA boycotted non-Union lettuce in support of the United Farm Workers. In 1979, ASUCLA supported the Nestle's boycott, in protest of the way Nestle's marketed baby formula in Third World countries. In 1981, ASUCLA changed its banking policies to use only "clean" banks, financial institutions with no ties to apartheid South Africa. Last Spring, ASUCLA voted to deposit funds with a Chicago bank that pioneered a loan program for low-income people in its neighborhood.

We know there's more we could do. But we need your help. If you're aware of a company that does not adhere to ethical and socially responsible business practices, we'd like to know so that we can scrutinize our business relationship. Similarly, we'd like to hear about companies that deserve encouragement and praise for their high standards.



There's complete information about providing input to ASUCLA in our brochure explaining our Policy on Ethical and Social Responsibility. Please pick up a copy at the Ackerman Union information desk or other campus locations — just look for the cover design shown at left. And thank you!

UCLA gays, lesbians celebrate 'National Coming Out Day'

By Elizabeth Escobar
Contributor

Commemorating the first-year celebration of the largest civil rights march ever to occur in Washington D.C., members of the gay and lesbian community at UCLA celebrated the event yesterday.

National Coming Out Day, as the day has come to be known, symbolizes the recognition and acceptance of over 20 million gay and lesbian men and women across the nation.

According to Gary Murakami, co-chair of the UCLA Gay and Lesbian Association (GALA), National Coming Out Day represents the development of awareness within the homosexual and heterosexual community about the contributions to society that gay men and women have accomplished.

"The entire goal of National Coming Out Day is to increase our visibility and to tell the heterosexual population, 'Yes, we are out there,'" said Murakami.

Although Murakami acknowledged the fact that homosexuals have long been ignored by their peers, he also concurred, "20 million people across the country are hard to ignore."

"National Coming Out Day is not really about civil rights anymore . . . it's more personalized now," he said. The day reminds the community of the struggle for gay and lesbian civil rights, yet, according to Murakami, it also invites gay and lesbian men and women to take individual steps in accepting themselves and their role in society.

'The underlying theme behind National Coming Out Day is to get homosexual men and women to make the next step in accepting themselves.'

— Gary Murakami, GALA co-chair

"The underlying theme behind National Coming Out Day is to get homosexual men and women to make the next step in accepting themselves . . . the 'next step' , could mean anything, from confronting our parents about our homosexuality to wearing a button promoting rights . . . it is a day of acceptance."

The day was not only celebrated individually within the UCLA community, but also nationwide. National Gay Rights Advocates, an organization fighting and promoting the gay civil rights movement, sponsored the nationally recognized commemoration.

Although no special events were scheduled yesterday in honor of the day, Murakami said, "National Coming Out Day marks a continual process — one day is set out to recognize that difficult process of acceptance."

GSA bulletin advises campus out-of-staters

Grads also discuss ways to get more involved in Homecoming

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

Students currently paying out-of-state tuition can now find out more about becoming permanent California residents, with the help of a Graduate Students Association bulletin.

According to a statement released Monday, prepared by the GSA Commissioner of Research Kurt Kemp, students applying for a "reclassification petition" at Murphy Hall must be able to prove they have been in the state for more than one year and demonstrate an intention to remain in California permanently.

GSA's bulletin explains several ways in which students can express their desire to remain in the state, including registering and actually voting in California; working and proving financial independence; obtaining a California driver's license or Department of Motor Vehicles' identification card and registering a car in the state.

GSA has not decided how to make the statement available to all students, said Miguel Bernard-Chavarria, GSA internal vice-president. The statement could appear in a GSA publication, but for now, Bernard explained, interested students are urged to come to the GSA offices in 301 Kerckhoff for more information.

Monday's cabinet meeting

The cabinet also considered ways for graduate students to become more involved in homecoming activities. Among the items discussed at GSA's first meeting of the quarter were: participating in the blood drive, attending art shows and entering materials in art contests, attending the Westwood parade, buying homecoming T-shirts and playing on Bruin battle teams.

GSA also decided to include members of the Placement Career Planning Center (PCPC) at future meetings, in order to examine ways to provide improved services for graduate students.

Med center suffers from blood shortage

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor

The UCLA Medical Center is urging students, faculty and others in the community to give blood to help alleviate a shortage caused by a seasonal drop in donations.

Blood donations usually stay at low levels over the summer and at the beginning of the school year because of the lack of blood drives involving students, according to David Glassey, coordinator of the UCLA blood donor center.

He added that approximately 20 percent of the blood donated in the area is provided by students, and that seasonal shortages are common. The greatest need is for type O blood, which occurs in nearly 46 percent of the general population.

"It's happened every year in the last five or six years that we've had blood shortages in September," said Glassey.

"Throughout the month of September we've been on emergency-only status for type O (the most common blood type)," he continued.

"Emergency" status, Glassey explained, means that the medical center receives only 30 units of Type O blood daily, while the "optimum" level is considered to be 125 units daily. One unit is equivalent to one pint of blood.

He said that the Red Cross conducted blood drives in July and August and that by September they had "peaked out." But while the Red Cross has peaked in its collection efforts, the need for blood remains a constant.

"The UCLA Medical Center is the largest blood- and blood component-using hospital in Southern California because of the incredible number of specialties done here," said Glassey.

He explained that one of these specialties is open-heart surgery, which can use up to six units of blood. He added that there are 15 such surgeries scheduled this week.

Glassey also said there were 39 surgeries scheduled for yesterday, anyone of which could require blood. In addition, the hospital is currently home to seven O-positive bone-marrow transplant patients who require periodic transfusions.

He believes that because of these specialties the medical center "needs community-wide support."

For more information about donating blood, call UCLA's Blood Donor Center at 825-0888.

Gang-related killings send murder rate up

The Associated Press

A wave of gang-related slayings in September sent the city murder rate for this year soaring, a month after police said such killings were on the decline, officials said.

The 21 gang-related homicides recorded by the Police Department in September was an increase of almost 50 percent over the same period a year ago, authorities said.

In addition to those slayings, there were 10 other homicides during August and July that were not classified as gang-related until last month.

That increased the total number of gang-related killings in the city during the first nine months of 1988 to 174, compared to 155 during the same period last year.

"We don't feel good about it," Cmdr. William Booth, a police spokesman, said of the figures. "I'm not happy at all."

He said the Police Department would be re-evaluating how it deploys patrols in the city's gang-infested South Central area as a result of the new statistics.

He also noted that the overall homicide rate for the South Central area also declined, from 321 for the first nine months of 1987 to 255 for the same period this year, a 20 percent decrease.

"If that continues, we will have the lowest murder total in a decade," Booth said.

He added that the department is considering revising its criteria for determining what is a gang-related slaying. He said current methods allow many killings to be recorded as gang-related just because gang members are involved, although that fact may have nothing to do with the crime.

The Police Department currently classifies killings as gang-related if either the victim or suspect is a member of a gang, regardless of the motive for the slaying.

New safety measures delay reactor restart

Nuclear weapon supplies adequate despite shutdowns, assures official

By Bryan Brumley
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Energy Department officials, declaring a need to "rectify past sins" in its operation of atomic reactors, on Tuesday announced that the introduction of new safety procedures would delay restarting the Savannah River Plant, which produces nuclear weapons materials.

Energy Undersecretary Joseph Salgado also gave assurances that plutonium and tritium supplies are adequate to ensure that existing nuclear weapons would not degrade or be cannibalized to assure a continued strategic deterrent.

The three aging reactors at Savannah River, in Aiken S.C., have been shut down for safety considerations. Construction of new reactors to produce nuclear weapons materials is not expected to start until the early 1990s.

Salgado, addressing a midday news conference, said that Energy Department officials have ordered engineers at the Savannah River Plant to start up the K-reactor in December during a four-week phased operation that should bring it close to full steam in early January.

Department officials have also decided to postpone restarting the plant's P-reactor, which experienced problems in August. In congressional testimony on Sept. 30, Salgado said the P-reactor could be restarted within 30-45 days, but department officials now have decided that it should not be brought back into operation until late 1989, he said.

The third facility at the plant, the L-reactor, is scheduled to be restarted in the first three months of next year, he said.

All three reactors will be started slowly, using what Deputy Assistant Energy Secretary Richard W. Starostecki described as a "phased" operation designed to test and assess each step before the reactor is brought to full power.

New operating procedures are needed to ensure safety at Savannah River, which has come under renewed scrutiny on Capitol Hill in the wake of internal memoranda detailing operating problems since the plant opened in the early 1950s, said Salgado, Starostecki and other Energy Department officials.

"We have a moral obligation to rectify past sins," Salgado told the news conference.

An Energy Department statement issued after the news conference said that "three Savannah River reactors provide the source of tritium needed for the nation's nuclear deterrent." Plutonium, also produced by the reactors, has a longer half-life than tritium, and therefore does not pose as critical a problem.

"At present, all three reactors are out of service for routine maintenance and accelerated safety upgrades," the statement said.

"The department is implementing a comprehensive program at the Savannah River Plant to enable the facility to resume production of tritium within acceptable margins of safety," it said.

"The program is designed to resolve uncertainties about safety issues, improve operations, improve the department's technical vigilance and strengthen oversight," it said.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said President Reagan had been briefed by his national security adviser, Lt. Gen. Colin Powell, on the Savannah River situation and related matters.

"We feel the supplies of tritium will be maintained as production schedules are maintained in a safe manner," Fitzwater said.

Plutonium plant closed after 'minor incident'

The Associated Press

DENVER — The shutdown of Rocky Flats' main plutonium processing plant virtually halts production at the nuclear weapons plant and is the nation's second major suspension of such production in two months, an official said.

The building was shut down Saturday because of a "minor safety incident," according to the U.S. Energy Department. Three people were tested for "potential health" risks stemming from last month's incident, officials said.

Rockwell International Corp., which runs the plant, said no radioactive material was released nor was there any threat to the public or the environment.

Rockwell spokesman Ed Heintz said Monday that the shutdown would not affect other areas of the plant, and the building's 575 employees would not be laid off during the shutdown. The plant employs about 5,000.

But Richard W. Starostecki, the Energy Department's top safety expert, told The New York Times that the shutdown was in a building where classified work vital to the entire plant's operation is performed.

The shutdown essentially halts all production at the plant, he said, according to today's editions of the newspaper.

All three reactors at another nuclear weapons plant, the Savannah River Plant near Aiken, S.C., have been shut down since August when a mishap idled one of the reactors. The plant makes plutonium and tritium, which are used in nuclear weapons.

There are 13 other major production, waste and research plants in 12 states involved in nuclear weapons production.

The Rocky Flats incident occurred Sept. 29 in Building 771 at the plant 15 miles northwest of Denver. Heintz, who didn't elaborate on the input, said it would be up to Measure would give funds to homeless

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the sixth in a series on the November ballot propositions. Tomorrow: Proposition 85.

Propositions '88

Proposition 84:
Would provide $300 million for housing for emergency shelters for the homeless, low-income housing, new rental housing for the poor and elderly, housing for farmworkers and the disabled, and assistance for first-time home buyers.

SACRAMENTO — Proposition 84 would try to alleviate the plight of California's 200,000 homeless by offering incentives to developers to build low-income housing and fix up low-rent hotels.

The $300 million bond measure would also provide grants to non-profit emergency shelters, build state-run migrant labor camps and help low-income people buy their first homes.

A coalition of legislative leaders and nearly 100 senior, veterans, religious and charitable organizations that support the measure say Proposition 84 is "the right thing to do and the right way to do it."

Critics question the fiscal wisdom of approving more bonds just five months after voters' passage of $2.2 billion in June bond measures for schools, veterans, parks and earthquake rehabilitation. Proposition 84 is one of nine bond measures put on the Nov. 8 ballot by the Legislature and the governor. The $3.3 billion bond package for prisons, jails, schools, colleges, water, sewage, libraries and the homeless is a record for any one ballot.

"I authored the Housing and Homeless Bond Act to provide housing for the homeless, seniors, handicapped, families and first-time home buyers," state Senate leader David Roberti said in a recent statewide radio address.

"It will provide the homeless with a clean bed in a secure place," the Los Angeles Democrat said. "It gives the elderly a chance to live without fear of eviction.

"It will give single parents and couple with children the chance to leave overcrowded apartments and garages. And it will give the growing number of homeless children a chance to go to school regularly and break the cycle of uneducated, terrified children."

Like other November bond measures, Proposition 84 faces no organized opposition.

Authors of ballot pamphlet arguments against the measure include a Libertarian candidate for the Assembly, a businessman, an attorney and a man describing himself as a retired state administrator. They call instead for zoning and building code changes, policies to stem illegal immigration to California, and pay-as-you-go financing for state capital projects.

Proposition 84 would authorize the state to sell $300 million in general obligation bonds to finance farmworker housing, low-interest loans to developers and first-time home buyers, and grants to emergency shelters.

A total of $200 million would replenish an existing program that provides low-interest, long-term loans to housing developers who agree to rent at least 30 percent of their units at low-income rates.

Another $25 million would provide loans at no more than 3 percent interest for the purchase and rehabilitation of residential hotels that agree not to raise rents.

Nonprofit agencies and local governments could compete for $25 million in grants to provide emergency shelter for the homeless.

The state would spend $10 million to build housing that would be rented at low rates to migrant farmworkers and their families when they are working at local farms.

Another $25 million would provide low-interest loans and mortgage insurance to low-income people buying their first homes. The loans would supplement two existing housing loan programs for low- and moderate-income households and California veterans.

A total of $15 million would be paid in loans to developers who build "congregate" or "community" housing with common living areas and support services such as child care and job training for low-income residents.

The state would pay off the bonds from the general fund over a period of 20 years. An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would boost the state's cost by $235 million.

Loan repayments to the state would be used for additional loans.

Death-row convicts lose court appeals

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Three convicted California murderers sentenced to death for their crimes lost Supreme Court appeals Tuesday.

The justices ruled that Edgar Hendricks, Melvin M. Wade and Keith Williams received fair trials and proper sentences.

Prosecutors said Hendricks committed five murders during what one state court called a gay-bashing spree in the summer of 1980.

He was sentenced to death for the murders in San Francisco of James Parmer and Charleston Haynes. Police said Hendricks, a male prostitute, had sex with both men before shooting and robbing them.

Prosecutors said Hendricks also killed Harry Carter and James Burchell in Los Angeles after having been hired by them and killed Virginia Hernandez in Oakland.

Wade was convicted of the April 10, 1981 murder in San Bernardino of his 10-year-old stepdaughter, Joyce.

suspect, a young Asian resident of the Federal Ave. complex, then ran back into the building, barricading himself in his own apartment, Moore said.

Police established communication with the gunman by telephone, and convinced him to surrender at approximately 9:20, police said.

At press time, the suspect was in custody at the West Los Angeles division, and a homicidal investigation was being conducted.

Moore said at least two firearms were recovered in the apratment.

The victims' identity was not known at press time. Police did not know a motive for the shootings.

Moore described the female victim as being in her early forties.

Before the surrender, pedestrians and cars were blocked from the surrounding area, and local residents were prohibited from entering their apartments.

UCLA freshman Mark Aguilar said he heard about 20 shots being fired. Other witnesses said the shots lasted for nearly ten minutes.

Case of victim name release to be heard

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Tuesday agreed to decide whether states may bar publication or broadcast of a rape victim's name that reporters get from law enforcement officials.

The court said it will hear an appeal by a weekly Florida newspaper ordered to pay $97,500 to a rape victim for what the paper said was inadvertent publication of her name.

Lawyers for The Florida Star, a newspaper primarily serving the black community in Jacksonville, said it will be put out of business if forced to pay the award.

The Star obtained the rape victim's name from a report posted by the Jacksonville Sheriff's Department in its press room in October 1983.

The newspaper said a reporter trainee copied the sheriff's report, including the victim's name. It was published even though the newspaper has a policy against identifying rape victims.

"There was no factual dispute that the name was published in error and in violation of the Star's own policy," the newspaper said.

Publication of the name violated a Florida law that makes it a misdemeanor to publish or broadcast names or other identifying information of "the victim of any sexual offense."

The victim of the 1983 assault sued Sheriff Dale Carson and the Star. She was awarded $2,500 from the sheriff and $97,500 from the newspaper.

Lawyers for the Star said a 1986 state appeals court ruling that upheld the award ignored a series of Supreme Court decisions, including a 1975 ruling that states may not outlaw the broadcast of rape victims' names.

In that case, the victim's name was used in an open court hearing in which five men pleaded guilty to the at-

DEBATE '88 UCLA

Fulani to protest debate exclusion

Independent Party candidate to stage Pauley demonstration

By Shana Chandler, Staff Writer

Thursday evening at UCLA will feature more than a debate inside Pauley Pavilion between the Democratic and Republican candidates. Independent Party candidate Lenora B. Fulani and her constituents will appear outside of the Pavilion to protest the exclusion of Dr. Fulani from the debates.

Fulani is the first black woman to appear on the presidential ballot in all 50 states and the District of Columbia and the first to receive federal matching funds, according to B. Kwaku Duren, one of Fulani's "Rainbow Slate" candidates for vice-president. The "Slate" features six people of different races, religions and sexual orientations.

"She is a supporter of Jesse Jackson," Duren said, "but in the latter part of 1986 she began to outline plans for an independent campaign if Jackson were denied the nomination."

Now, Duren said, though Fulani is a legitimate candidate, she has been denied participation in the debates.

"In order to be included, you have to be able to prove you might win. But if you can't get your message across, how can people vote for you?" Duren said.

Fulani, 37, is chairperson of the New Alliance Party, a national progressive independent party founded in New York in 1979.

One and a half million signatures had to be gathered to include Fulani's name as the independent party's candidate.

She ran for governor of New York in 1986 and garnered more than 25,000 votes, according to Phil Terry, press secretary and student organizer for Fulani. Fulani also ran for mayor of New York City in 1985 and received more votes in Harlem than any other mayorial candidate.

"Congressional Quarterly has estimated that Fulani could get as much as one to three percent of the national vote on Nov. 8," Terry said. "In an election this close, that percentage could swing the election to the Republicans."

A lawsuit was filed in Washington, D.C. asking that the Commission on Presidential Debates lose their tax-exempt status and that Thursday's debate be canceled. A ruling is expected today.

The Commission would not comment on the matter yesterday afternoon because the case was still in litigation.

Regardless, Fulani will speak at USC and another college after the debate, Duren said.

"We are a people campaign, not a profits campaign," he explained. "We are laying the foundation for a third party movement in this country.

Duren believes the U.S. is undemocratic because the electoral college, and not the citizens, elect the president, he said.

"Look how many people don't vote. People have a choice in these elections between the devil and the deep blue sea. Most people choose, therefore, to go fishing on election day."

Security

"If you plan for the worst, anything less than that is already accounted for."

The Secret Service is responsible for insuring a secure environment and protecting not only the candidates but the general public as well.

Of course, candidates Bush and Dukakis do have one security advantage over the general public. They are guarded by Special Agents (body-guards) who are trained to protect the candidates, "even if that means putting one's own life in danger," Corbett said.

"Special Agents go through constant training so that they learn to react instead of to think and contemplate," he added. "They need to follow an instinctive reaction to protect, instead of thinking about it and wasting precious time."

Special Agents protect presidential candidates as well as vice presidents, former presidents and visiting foreign heads of state.

The general public will be depending upon campus police to keep them safe Thursday night. There will be more police at all parking lots and a few extra community service officers will be working, said UCPD Sgt. Michael Shain. Shain is in charge of communications between the different security and emergency agencies for the debate.

"Since this is a multi-agency event, we need a command post in Pauley Pavilion to relay information between UCPD, the fire department, secret services, etcetera," he said.

To insure that emergency vehicles have free passageways to Pauley, and to make sure no one trips, all electrical cables entering the building are being kept off the ground. Power cables are strung from tree to tree or building to building.

"One reason I'm here is to make sure that no one hurts themselves on the power lines," said Chris Rollo. An employee for Staffpro, Rollo is one of the guards patrolling the intramural field, north of the Pavilion, where the television network companies are stationed.

"There are a lot of power lines here due to all the networks' equipment and we just want to make sure that everyone stays safe," Rollo said. "Only network employees and people setting-up equipment are allowed in this area. If someone else trys to get in, my job is to force them out. If they refuse to leave, I'd call for a back-up. We don't carry guns."

At press time, the field was the only on-campus area that was closed to the public.

But when the first presidential debates were held in Wake Forest College in North Carolina this September the entire campus was closed off, said Captain E.L. Yokley of the city's police department there. Both the campus and the city police worked during that debate.

He said that because Wake is a private college, security procedures were very much simplified. The day of the debate, Yokley continued, only students with identification, university staff members, security teams, and people invited to attend the debate were permitted on school grounds.

"The chapel building (in which the debate was held) was sealed off to everyone since 9 that morning," Yokley said. "Before sealing it, the secret service first searched it for explosives.

"That night, everyone entering the chapel had to walk through the magnatometers (metal detectors). All guests were advised not to bring parcels or handbags. If they did, the bags were searched."

Yokley added that "every precaution" possible was taken. "For instance, there is a large wooded area close to the chapel that someone may be able to hide in. That night we lit it up, stationed mounted police around it, and put a policeman and dog inside the area."

Yokley said having Dukakis and Bush come to town was virtually like having two U.S. presidents there at the same time. "We took all the security precautions we would take for the president, and then doubled that," he said.

All intersections, Yokley continued, were blocked off, and medical personnel even carried "enough of the correct blood type for each candidate" in case of an emergency.

According to Yokley, there were no security problems during the debate. He credits the smooth running of the event to the advanced planning that his department, campus police, highway patrol and emergency services put into it.

The UCLA security and emergency teams have been busy planning Thursday's debate ever since the chosen site was announced last Friday afternoon. Yokley said that authorities at Wake University were planning the September 25 debate since April.

Supreme Court agrees to hear case involving Achille Lauro

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Tuesday agreed to hear a case involving damage suits brought against the owners of the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro as a result of a 1985 PLO hijacking in which American passenger Leon Klinghoffer was killed.

The question brought before the court is whether American courts must respect a provision printed on the line's passenger tickets that require "any controversy" to be heard before courts in Naples.

Klinghoffer, 69, of New York, traveling with his wife Marilyn, was killed by the four pirates who took over the ship, firing Soviet-made submachine guns and brandishing hand grenades and other explosives. The man, who was Jewish, had been paralyzed on the right side by a stroke several years earlier and was in a wheelchair.

The U.S. District Court in New York denied a motion by the Lauro Line in 1987 to dismiss all the damage suits for lack of authority because of the provision on the ticket. The U.S. Court of Appeals dismissed the ship line's appeal.

Lauro Lines, saying that five courts of appeals have issued conflicting opinions on a clause on which "forum" can hear a case, asked the high court to decide.

Court upholds ruling on way Tisch became CBS president

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Tuesday refused to revive a challenge to the way Laurence A. Tisch became president of CBS Inc.

The justices, without comment, let stand rulings that Tisch's assumption of power did not amount to a transfer of control requiring prior approval by the Federal Communications Commission.

Tisch, chairman of Loews Corp., purchased 24.9 percent of CBS voting stock in 1986.

A group called Fairness in Media, long a critic of CBS news coverage, asked the commission to investigate the results of Tisch's stock purchase.

The commission sent a letter of inquiry to CBS in late 1986, and after receiving a reply ruled that "the events, to date, do not constitute a transfer of control" as defined in the federal Communications Act of 1934.

Fairness in Media appealed, and a federal appeals court here upheld the commission's dismissal of the complaint.

In the appeal acted on today, Fairness in Media argued that the commission's investigation "was a sham that demands judicial denunciation as arbitrary."

The appeal said the purchase of stock in CBS should have required commission approval as had ABC's acquisition by Cap Cities and NBC's sale to General Electric.

NOMMO: Founders wrestled with political message campus. They began searching for a student who could accomplish this goal.

In January of 1968, Marcia Brown, now known as Marsallay Spicer, a 20-year old student with a newborn child, returned to school at UCLA. Her close friend and roommate Linda Taylor was BSU secretary.

"When I returned to school, Linda told me that students were trying to establish a black newspaper" and asked her to become involved, said Spicer, who later became a professional journalist for many years in Washington, D.C.

"I told her I was more worried about getting a job and taking care of my baby," Spicer said with amusement. "I told her, 'I don't know anything about this black movement stuff!' "

Spicer's roommate eventually convinced her to attend one of the planning sessions. "I can't remember much about the meeting really. But I remember Ronald Van Downing (a UCLA student) impressed me and energized me towards the movement," said Spicer. Both Spicer and Van Downing began working to make the paper a reality.

The first issue with Spicer as Editor-in-Chief and Van Downing as Special Media Consultant featured new stories covering Tom Bradley's announcement to run for Los Angeles mayor, a student strike at San Francisco State College, the unveiling of the first official Black American flag, and the fatal shooting of three black students by patrolmen on the South Carolina State campus.

Spicer's roommate, who is now known as Linda Ferguson, is currently Director of Young Black Scholars at UCLA. Ferguson said that she is impressed with NOMMO not so much for journalistic reasons but because of its "ties to the community." The paper is distributed throughout the Greater Los Angeles area, including at Dorsey High School, Martin Luther King Hospital, and the Afro-American Cultural Center.

"(NOMMO's existence) shows the community that UCLA has some awareness that it's still a community institution," said Ferguson.

As with any news publication, NOMMO has been confronted with questions as to whether it serves the interest of its readers. Daniel Johnson believes that in this regard NOMMO is open for criticism.

"For me, looking at what we put into getting this paper established, NOMMO has never come close to fulfilling its mission," said Johnson. That mission was to reflect all segments of the Afro-American community and promoting communication on campus, according to Johnson.

The former BSU chair said that community issues like the influx of drugs, gangs, and guns has gone largely ignored by the paper. He also believes NOMMO should write about blacks like Ralph Bunche who "overcame racial indignities to accomplish a great deal on the UCLA campus." Johnson said that he believes NOMMO's content has been dominated by issues of national and global racism rather than reflecting the dynamic issues and perspectives of the entireAfro-American community.

Sitting back with his two-year-old daughter sleeping in his arms, Johnson warned, "I don't think the University needs another 20 years of NOMMO making the same mistakes that its made up to this point."

However, Ivie believes the mere fact that NOMMO has been published for the last 20 years is a testimony to the black students and the UCLA community's need for the paper.

Spicer, Johnson, Ferguson, and Ivie all agreed that NOMMO's existence has been beneficial to the UCLA community. More significantly, these four individuals and their current commitment to the community are living proof of the long term benefit of NOMMO.

Court rules migrant workers covered by fair treatment laws

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Tuesday let stand a ruling that migrant workers who harvest cucumbers for pickling are protected by a federal law requiring fair treatment of employees.

The court rejected an appeal by a Wisconsin farm-owning couple who said the migrants are "independent contractors" not covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Justice Byron R. White voted to hear arguments in the case. But the votes of at least four justices are required to grant such review.

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last December ruled against Michael and Marilyn Lauritzen, owners of a farm near Waupaca, Wis.

The appeals court said the pickers — like other migrant workers — are employees under the federal law. It ruled that the Lauritzens are not entitled to a full trial in the case.

The migrants "depend on the (Lauritzens') land, agricultural expertise, equipment and marketing skills," the appeals court said. "They are the defendants' employees."

But the 7th Circuit court said that does not mean the Lauritzens must shoulder an unfair economic burden.

The couple "need only think of the proceeds paid to the pickle pickers as wages, keep the necessary records and make sure they abide by the protections that the act accords to working children," the appeals court said.

The U.S. Labor Department sued the Lauritzens to force them to keep records of the names, ages and work hours of the migrants; to require them to determine whether young children were working in the fields; and to guarantee payment of the minimum wage.

Allegations that the farm owners were not paying the minimum wage later were dropped.

The migrants usually work in the fields from July through September. While the crop is often referred to as pickles, it actually is a type of cucumber suitable for pickling.

The Lauritzens subdivide their property into family plots, and the migrant family decides which members will pick the pickles. The migrants' income is determined in part by their ability to judge the pickles' size, color and freshness so as to harvest the more valuable pickles.

The workers also can increase their income by caring for the plants and pickles on their plot.

But the 7th Circuit court said those factors do not mean the workers are anything other than employees.

The Lauritzens "did not effectively relinquish control of the harvest to the migrants," the appeals court said.

And, the appeals court added, the need for some skill in harvesting pickles does not make the migrants independent contractors.

"Skills are not the monopoly of independent contractors. We do not find that this level of skill sets the pickle harvester apart from the harvester of other crops," the appeals court said.

The case is Lauritzen vs. Brock, 87-1853.

Ruling

tack.

In that 1975 ruling, the Supreme Court said the Constitution's First Amendment does not allow states to "impose sanctions for the publication of truthful information contained in official court records open to public inspection."

Lawyers for the Florida rape victim, a nurse's assistant with four children, said there is a distinction between court records and the report provided by the Jacksonville sheriff.

The lawyers said the sheriff mistakenly made the victim's name available and therefore "the report was not a public record in the sense that it was available for inspection by the public."

The Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press and the Times Herald Printing Co., publisher of The Dallas Times Herald, urged the Supreme Court to overturn the Florida court ruling.

The justices, seeking assurances that they have authority to rule in the case, sent it back to the Florida Supreme Court last December. The state court then removed any procedural obstacle.

The case is The Florida Star vs. B.J.F., 87-329.

the Energy Department to decide to reopen the building, and a restart team already had been set up.

Speaking in Washington, Starostecki said the order came about after an Energy Department inspector and two Rockwell employees were contaminated by plutonium when they walked into an unmarked room where maintenance and cleanup work was being performed on plutonium-contaminated equipment.

Rockwell will conduct a semiannual inventory of nuclear materials in the building during the shutdown, the Energy Department said.

It said Rockwell curtailed maintenance and construction in the building Oct. 4 to review the situation. The review determined among other things that airborne radioactive contamination levels were within government guidelines, but higher than Department of Energy goals.

Early this year, an Energy Department team reported "serious concerns" with radiation monitoring practices at the plant. The team spent a week auditing the plant and plutonium processing, paying what it termed close attention to the calibration of plant radiation measurement equipment.

At the Savannah River Plant, it was disclosed last week that up to 30 significant mishaps occurred during the past three decades, and that many had not been reported to Washington or disclosed to the public.

AIDS

Other demonstrators circled in front of the building's entrances, chanting, "Act up; fight back; fight AIDS" and "Test drugs, not people."

Leaders of the protest describe the FDA's response to the AIDS crisis as criminally inadequate.

On Monday, a small contingent of police watched as a series of speakers outside the headquarters of the Health and Human Services Department ridiculed the Reagan administration, saying it has done little to help AIDS victims or support research toward a cure. Protesters also castigated news organizations, saying they have not paid enough attention to the disease.

Monday's rally was organized as a mock trial with speaker after speaker reading off a list of "charges" against the administration as a "judge" stood by nodding affirmatively at each count.

"Guilty, guilty, guilty," the crowd chanted as various charges were leveled.

A major focus of the rally was to press for wide access to experimental drugs for people suffering from AIDS.

As of Sept. 26, AIDS had been diagnosed in 74,447 Americans, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control. Of those, the CDC says, 41,925 have died.

Homeless

called on the Board of Supervisors last week to investigate why Quiroz returned $3.15 million in homeless money to the state when local programs for the mentally ill homeless were struggling.

In addition, Assemblyman Bruce Bronzan, D-Fresno, chairman of the Legislative Audit Committee and a leader in the mental health field, said he has requested that the state auditor-general's office launch an inquiry into the department.

The homeless program, known as the Mental Health Services Act of 1985, provided for more than $20 million a year statewide for new programs for the mentally ill homeless. Several million of that was for Los Angeles County.

Furthermore, it is the Daily Bruin's policy that all inserts be approved by both the business manager and the publications director. In this case the Miller poster was approved by Chao but not submitted to the publications director, Terence Hsiao.

According to Chao, who gave final approval for the poster, her oversight was due to the tremendous amount of extra work associated with the 208-page registration issue that was published one day before the poster was distributed.

Hsiao said the Daily Bruin advertising office is taking steps to ensure that this does not happen again. "This is something that never should have gone through" said Hsiao.

The university and the licensing office took this very seriously, said Revoyr. The licensing office has contacted Miller Beer and told the company that it violated the UCLA trademark and California State education code 9200. This code prohibits the use of the commercial use of the UCLA name without permission. Violation of this code is a misdemeanor.

Revoyr is waiting for a response from Miller before determining a course of action.

Macintosh prices are up. But not at ASUCLA.

Macintosh prices at the ASUCLA Computer Store are always a great deal. But now they're better than ever. Because most of the "real world" is raising prices. We aren't.

Why are our prices still so low? There are two basic reasons.

One reason is Apple Computer. The people at Apple are smart. They know that today's students are going to be tomorrow's leaders — in industry, in government, in education. They want tomorrow's leaders to be Macintosh users. So they're willing to provide special low prices for the educational market.

The other reason is the ASUCLA Computer Store. We're one of the biggest computer stores on any college campus. So we have certain advantages. Like the ability to make large-volume purchases, so we can stave off price increases for a while.

If you're a UCLA student, faculty or staff member, you're eligible to buy your Macintosh from us. But only while you study or work at UCLA.

Look at the prices below and consider. Can you afford to miss the opportunity?

Macintosh Plus

ZBT's sexist display is a disgrace to the house and the university

By Shari L. Brooks

We are writing this letter in order to point out something disturbing, some say even appalling, to the general population of UCLA.

As you know, some time ago, in 1986, the fraternities became directly affiliated with UCLA. This was done for a number of reasons, the main one being that by having the fraternities directly affiliated, the University could better control the behavior (or rather misbehavior) of the members.

Many consequences have happened since that affiliation took place. For example, theme parties with racist or cultural content in themes have been officially banned. Another example was when a Christian fraternity lost its affiliation. Both of these actions took place because of the University's non-discrimination policy.

This policy can be found on any official UCLA application or in the back of any UCLA catalog. This policy specifically states that the university does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, religion, sex, sexual orientation, mental or physical handicap or age. Through direct affiliation, the fraternities are subject to these regulations. That is why the theme parties were officially banned. However, a theme party is just a one-shot thing: it happens, and then it's gone.

Painted very prominently on the outside of the ZBT Annex house, on the corner of Roebling and Landfair, are the names of various pledge classes:

BUSHBUSTERS
LABIAN KNIGHTS
BEAVERSHOOTERS
VAGILANTES
SNATCHBUCKLERS

Why hasn't the university done anything about this? This is not something temporary: it is a permanent fixture on display for the entire community to see. It is offensive; it is sexist; it is misogynous; and it has been there for years — the dates are painted there, just to remind you of that. Many female students refuse to walk on that side of the street, for the slogans clearly proclaim the members' attitudes toward women.

We are appalled that such a fine upstanding institution as UCLA supports this and indeed is part of it through direct affiliation, and we demand that ZBT paint out the slogans and issue a full public apology, or else lose its affiliation with UCLA.

Dukakis versus Bush: UCLA is being used

By Jeff Korn

The Presidential race has spun into full force, the candidates are maligning one another, promises are being made, and the world is coming to Pauley Pavilion in the form of the second Presidential debate. At first, one might get excited over such an important happening on our worthy campus. A proud student might think that UCLA envelops the American persona and represents the perfect cross-section of cultures and identities of the nation and even the world (and it does), and that is the reason it was chosen as the site for the presidential debate. This unfortunately is not entirely true. In addition, the debate organizers have restricted admission to the debate because they feel it is exclusively a "television event."

UCLA, besides having strategic location in Southern California (a political feasting ground), has excellent facilities and great accessibility to the public. This is the problem. The word "public" has seemed to slip the minds of the organizers of the debate. The organizers have made no arrangements for public tickets, no allowances for UCLA students to view some part of this hard-fought presidential campaign, and worst of all they are just plain using us (the university community). The university need not be used for a debate between two people and television cameras. If they want no public viewing, then why not have the debate at Burbank studios or Paramount or another studio?

Instead, the debate will be seen from a major university with the same press and personnel as in Washington. Only campaign personnel, organizers of the debate and some influential members of the community, who either have some official position or lots of money in their bank accounts, will be allowed to view the debate.

This decision by organizers leaves many vacant seats in what otherwise would have been a packed house of Democrats and Republicans, students and faculty and upper- and lower-class citizens.

The organizers believe that the debate is solely for television viewing and that an audience would produce raucous behavior and excessive noise. Leaving the community out of the debate just shows the impersonality that the average American derives from the campaign. Television commercials, telecasted debates, press releases and isolated appearances leave Dukakis and Bush far removed from the public. People do not want to vote for an image on a television screen. They want to vote for a person. No wonder there is apathy about elections in the United States.

So I guess I will watch the presidential debate in my room, while a mere 200 meters away it will be happening "live."

Yearning for diverse faculty at UCLA

Adriana Manjarrez

In 12 years of elementary and secondary school, I only had one Latino teacher. But the one I remember most — a Latina teacher's assistant in the first grade — unfortunately wasn't even my teacher. The kids who did have her in their class thought they were special.

My classmates and I envied them for having someone in their class speaking Spanish to them. Yet it was more than the T.A.'s ability to speak Spanish that attracted us; it was the fact that she was like us; she was a Latina who without speaking to us knew us as opposed to knowing about us.

We admired her because she wasn't just another Latina in the cafeteria making food or cleaning toilets, she was in the classroom as an educator.

We would look at her through the window admiring her like a goddess. Her black hair — the way it covered her face as she bent over to help students — sticks vividly in my mind. I've experienced the same type of yearning for someone like her in my education today.

Some divine power must have heard my wish.

While fixing my study list, I really dreaded and almost feared the type of professors I'd end up with this quarter. I honestly did not want to deal with anymore classes that white-washed the perspectives of Mexicans and Africans or "people of color" as we are being referred to lately.

After four years of college I had gotten used to a colonialist's interpretation of the world based on another colonialist's research, but this quarter, I consciously wished that I might get a Chicano or a Black professor at random, without having to take a Chicano or Afro-American studies course, which most likely would be taught by a Chicano or Black professor. You know what I mean?

The lack of Black or Latino professors at the college level makes me feel that I have been deprived of my community on this campus and consequently of my identity.

So on the first day of the quarter, I waited in my Sociology class for the professor, fully expecting more of the same.

But to my amazement, a serene Black woman entered the hall and as she stood in front, almost boldly facing the class, I was introduced to the first Black female professor I have seen at UCLA. Man, after four years at UCLA will it be four more years in my education before I see another Black female professor?

A week later, I finally got into a course that I thought I had no chance to enter. I went to the class for the first time — late — to find, again to my amazement, that this second Sociology professor was also Black.

You see, I have a special affection for Black educators because all my elementary school teachers were Black; a lot of the teachers at La Cienega elementary were Black.

In Junior high and in High school, the best teachers I ever had were Black.

You've probably assumed by now that I grew up in the "inner-city." I suppose it's true if that's what you want to call all of Los Angeles with the exception of Westwood.

The lack of Black or Latino professors at the college level makes me feel that I have been deprived of my community on this campus and consequently of my identity. A lot of readers may not know what I'm talking about; others will know perfectly well what I mean.

It is those students who have experienced alienation on a crowded yet ghostly campus. ■

It's OK to blame Reagan

"I am not responsible for the successful working of the machinery of society. I am not the son of the engineer."
— Henry David Thoreau, Civil Disobedience

By Jo H Yang

I was amused. I was entertained when I read Guido Lionello Del Piccolo's viewpoint, "Don't blame President Reagan for poverty in the United States" (Bruin, October 6). Certainly, Del Piccolo was right: "We are to blame" for poverty in the United States. However, I think it is because we were born and raised in this great land with a distinct culture and a long cherished tradition. Oh yeah? He missed the point. Ignoring America's past, its culture and tradition, and, oh yes, Reagan's economic failures as a president, Del Piccolo erroneously asserted that we do not seek change or incite another revolution only because we have these so-called "valves." Idealistic, indeed.

Irresponsibility. This is what our great ideological founding fathers, and mothers, have taught us. Those who truly revere Thoreau doubtlessly espouse his irresponsible attitude: Ask me if I care! Our venerable Ralph Waldo Emerson, the proponent of individualism, did not realize that individualism is the root of gradual apathy in public affairs. And then there's our beloved Ayn Rand, whose character Howard Roark of The Fountainhead practices absolute individualism. Absolute absurdity. Rand even authored a book called The Virtue of Selfishness. I did not know that "selfishness" is a virtue. Oh, how I condemn those great thinkers who infiltrated their egoistic ideas into the minds of the public. So, there, why should we initiate changes for the hungry and the homeless when we are well-fed and well-sheltered? Yes, a tradition of excellence. This is the part of the American culture that Del Piccolo has either declined to acknowledge or overlooked.

There is a popular saying, "Charity starts at home." Indeed. One cannot expect people to have ambitions to change the world, to eliminate injustices when they have problems themselves. According to a 1985 study published by the U.S. National Institute on Drug Abuse, in the population of 12 and over, 59.2 percent are users of alcohol; 9.4 percent are users of marijuana; and 2.9 percent, of cocaine. Do you think that these people are going to care about the homeless at Downtown L.A.? Wait till they sober up.

EGOISM: A dishonorable American tradition

Additionally, based on American Humane Association's 1985 findings, there were 1,299,400 reported cases of child neglect, abuse and molestation nationwide. If those people cannot be humane even to their child(ren), how can you expect them to care for that ten-year-old body who "WILL WORK FOR FOOD"? Simply, those who cannot take care of themselves and their families cannot take care of others.

Finally, should we blame Reagan for poverty, or rather, the Federal budget and trade deficit we have today in the United States? I shall think so. In 1980, the presidential candidate Reagan blamed Jimmy Carter for the Federal budget deficit. Today, our national debt is over $2.5 trillion (from September 1988 USA Today). Similarly, in just six year, we had $141 billion of net plus in foreign assets in 1981 compared to a net deficit of $264 billion by the end of 1986 (from the same source). If Reagan could use Carter as a "valve," I do not understand why he refuses to be people's "valve." Thus, if he takes no blame, then he deserves no credit either. Perhaps, Reagan is not directly responsible for higher poverty, but he is not of Thoreau's "cultured" devotees, marked by his irresponsibility.

I do not profess myself to be a "social engineer," but I am obligated to society; I am responsible for its well-being, because I am a part of this society. I agree that we must take power, but changes do not come easily as Del Piccolo seems to think. If we want America to change, we must first alter its culture and then erase its past, its tradition. However, those objectives are impossible to achieve. So we must teach people to think differently: teach them the meaning of "responsibility."

Yang is an undeclared freshman.

Letters

ACLU and religion

Editor:

Mr. Colvin, in his letter of 10-7-88, would like you to believe that the ACLU is saying "You must not pray in school." This is absolutely not the case. Any child who wishes to pray in school is totally free to do so. What the ACLU is trying to prevent is the establishment of laws stating that teachers shall lead their classes in prayer. What the ACLU is trying to prevent is the establishment of laws stating that teachers shall lead their classes in prayer. What the ACLU is actually saying is "You must not force me to pray in school."

Those in favor of school prayer are not interested in freedom of religion, rather they are interested in the freedom to push their religious views on other people. If I'm forced to attend school (as children are in this country) then I'm being forced to attend church. What happened to my religious freedom?

UNCLE EMM'S MAILBAG

Dear North Poll,
I love reading about all the exciting events that are listed in your column. When I realize what marvelous creative powers are at work on this campus, I feel a deep rumbling in my soul, a yearning for the release of my own humble creativity, a . . . a . . . geez, I don't know. How can I be a part of these projects? Where do I go? What do I do? I must fulfil the needs of my id.

Harris Brawn
Ethnobiology

Dear Harris,
Not a moment too soon! If you want to participate in the productions of the individual Departments, head on up to the buildings and sniff around. The Motion Pictures/Television Department (in Melnitz Hall) student films always need crew people and assistants. The soap opera they're producing there and the situation comedy series both could use more people on crew, and the experience you can pick up would come in handy. Check the bulletin boards. Also check the boards in and around Macgowan Hall, because many of the plays underway need crew people and talent. Time commitments for the shows can range from only a week or so to an entire quarter, so there'll probably be something to suit you. The other departments have people needs too; check their bulletin boards. It's a great way to make new friends, get some experience, and maybe even pick up a few units.

Dear Emm,
Guy, you are wild! How can I get in touch with you to tell you about the amazing stuff I, a very informed kind of dude, find out about. I mean, you can't find out about all those events yourself, can you?

Barth Primrose

Dear Barth,
You're right — I can't do it all myself. When something comes your way, big or small, let me know about it by leaving a note for me in care of the Arts & Entertainment Editor in the Bruin office, or in my mailbox in Macgowan Hall. I'm interested in all types of live performance and art that UCLA students are creating.

People used to think of producers as old guys sitting at a desks, smoking big cigars, calling everybody 'baby.' And when they thought of successful producers, women were never considered — because there weren't any. And while there are but a handful of successful women producers today, one stands out as the touchstone, occupying a powerful position in the Hollywood circles that get films made. Sherry Lansing — talented, ambitious, beautiful, successful — produced last summer's blockbuster Fatal Attraction with her partner Stanley Jaffe, and her hopes are just as high for her latest film The Accused.

"I've never done a movie that I didn't think was going to be a giant hit, and very few of them have been," Lansing said with a laugh. "I thought Fatal Attraction was going to be a giant and it was. So every once and a while you're lucky and you're right."

Her optimism didn't help generate very many box-office dollars for the first two Jaffe-Lansing productions — Richard Benjamin's Racing with the Moon and Michael Apted's Firstborn. But with the phenomenal success of Fatal Attraction, this production team is just beginning to roll.

Lansing, who would eventually become the first woman president of a major studio, had very inauspicious beginnings, as far as Hollywood is concerned. A graduate of Northwestern University, with a B.S. in speech, her first job was as a math teacher in Watts shortly after the 1965 riots. Then it was modeling and acting, before starting out for a production career.

"There weren't any women in the film business to have as role models," she said of those early days, "and that was sort of lucky for me, because I could become my own role model. I didn't have to copy anybody, I had no limitations. I didn't have the burden of having to follow anybody else."

Beginning as a script reader, then as an executive story editor at MGM, Lansing quickly moved up the executive ladder. Moving to Columbia Pictures as senior vice-president for production, the films she supervised included The China Syndrome and Kramer Vs. Kramer. In 1980, Lansing took her historical steps into the presidency of Twentieth Century Fox, supervising production of The Verdict, Quest for Fire, and Jaffe's productions of Taps and Without a Trace.

In 1982, she joined forces with Stanley Jaffe, the former president of Paramount who later formed his own company which produced the Academy Award winning Kramer Vs. Kramer. Today, Jaffe-Lansing Productions distinguishes itself as the only production company headed by two former studio chiefs.

Producer Sherry Lansing

"I think we look for pictures that are entertaining and have substance in them; that do more than just entertain, that have an impact," Lansing said of her partnership with Jaffe. "We're very close and we're very different. Our relationship ebbs and flows, in the sense that at any give time Stanley will be taking the lead, or I'll be taking the lead, sort of like a marriage. It's a terrific partnership, and I feel I have the best friend and the best partner in the world."

Jaffe is presently in Osaka, Japan, supervising pre-production of their next film Black Rain, starring Michael Douglas and Andy Garcia, directed by Ridley Scott.

Jaffe-Lansing Productions' current release, The Accused (opens Friday), tells the story about a young woman who is violently gangraped on a pinball machine as a crowd of cheering, clapping men look on. Kelly McGillis is Assistant District Attorney Kathryn Murphy, assigned to prosecute the case of Sarah Tobias, played by Jodi Foster.

Together, the women bring to trial the people as dangerous as the men who committed the crime — the witnesses who let it happen. The issues presented in the film, of accountability and responsibility, are very similar to those presented in Fatal Attraction.

"I don't think there's any man who will sleep with a woman and not call her in the morning," Lansing said. "Glenn Close goes too far, but I think women, when someone treats them poorly, are mad as hell and not taking it any more. These women will not be dismissed. They fight back. I don't want to do movies about dismissable people."

Lansing's attraction to strong women's roles, however, does not govern her project selections. "I feel a responsibility to show women in any movie, in complicated, unidealized, interesting ways," she said. "I can't imagine ever doing a film that has less than complicated women. I don't want to do that. I want to show multi-faceted, multi-shaded people."

"My whole life I've always been fascinated and deeply concerned about the responsibility of the bystander, about the responsibilities that a witness has," said Lansing. "I remember when I was a kid

Chinese painters visit UCLA to promote cross-cultural exchange

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Artistic cross-cultural exchange was the phrase yesterday as UCLA welcomed a delegation of Chinese painters from the People's Republic of China.

The group of artists included Deng Lin, daughter of China's senior leader Deng Xiaoping. She has just opened her first exhibition in New York City (at the Hefner Galleries on Madison Avenue), sharing the show with Long Rui, a leading Chinese landscapist.

In a visit organized by UCLA Design Professor Kathleen Bick, the Chinese artists had luncheon at the Faculty Club and then took a walking tour through UCLA's Murphy Sculpture Garden for about half-an-hour, where they gave a brief interview.

Artist Deng Lin is most interested in results on paper and ink. The 47 years old-Deng is also President of Society for the Excellence of the Fine Arts in the Orient, an organization run by artists devoted to wider recognition of brush-and-ink painting.

A recognized artist in China, Deng has had solid academic training; she is given a stipend by Chinese government, can sell work abroad. Asked about her goal in having a show and visiting the U.S., Deng said, "We want to get some influence. Chinese art has not had much influence on Western art." She wants to spread influence of Chinese painting in the West.

In interview, aided by an interpreter, Deng said it was difficult to delineate the main differences between Western and Chinese art. "In general, it's hard to say," she said. "Mostly, Chinese art stresses the need to express inner peace. The idea of unity between the human being and the nature."

According to Deng, the concept of oneness in life runs through all aspects of Chinese culture including music, art, and theater. "Western or American art does not quite do that," she said.

UCLA alumnus Harmon speaks today

Here's a quote from an UCLA alumnus:
"I went to a junior college before coming to UCLA, because of its curriculum. When I came here I was lost for two weeks. I couldn't find my classes. I had trouble finding places, and I had no parking. . ."
Sounds like a familiar new UCLA student story? Of course. But the story continues a little differently than most. It continues in leading the 1972 and 1973 Bruin football team to 8-3 and 9-2 records as quarterback; in developing a productive television career in popular serials such as Flamingo Road and St. Elsewhere; and then later landing movie roles in Summer School and The Presidio. In addition, throw in some choice beer commercial spots and a guest shot in the controversial three-part season finale of Moonlighting and you have a geniune star on your hands. You have Mark Harmon. The actor/former UCLA student-football player will be speaking today at noon the Freud Theater in MacGowan Hall.

CHINESE: Exchange

Having been a painter for 28 years, Deng paints mostly floral subjects. She considers completing the work to be her favorite part about painting. "When you finish the piece, it's a beautiful feeling," she said. Although her famous does not paint, "he likes art, and especially enjoys the Peking opera," she said.

The message or feeling that Deng wants to get across in her art is "a spirit of upward-moving, a spirit of all-encompassing energy." In her painting, Deng attempts to "express the struggle, the spirit of struggle for perfection."

Although she has been in L.A. and UCLA two times, Deng plans to have no show on the West Coast at this time.

Regarding the influence of Western art on Chinese art, Deng said, "You're influencing us, we're influencing you." As for favorite artists, Deng admires the Dutch master van Gogh and the chinese landscape painter Ju Da from the early Ching dynasty (1644-1912), the last imperial dynasty.

Is Deng concerned about Chinese art losing its identity under the impact of Western influence. "No way, our roots are there. It will always stay."

UCLA Design Professor Kathleen Bick has been working to establish an exchange program for faculty and students with the prestigious Institute of Research in Traditional Chinese Art in Beijing.

"Being a professor in the art department, related to the arts, I feel we should find out more about Chinese art," she said. Having traveled extensively to China, Bick first made connections through her interaction with the Peking opera, whose members she met in L.A. in 1980 and on a subsequent visit to China in 1982. "For me, the vehicle has been in opera, because it's easier to communicate in performing arts, where you don't have the language barrier," she said. "Not being fluent in Chinese, it's hard to walk into a place as big as China and find a painter, since it's a very singular type of thing, or to find out more about painting or photography."

Her area of interest being design, photography and computer-aided design, Bick also paints, and teaches courses in color on campus. "I try to stay aware of all the arts. I've always wanted to get to know people closer to my own area of painting, design, computer, photography." Next year, Bick will be going over to teach at the two major design academies in China.

Painting is very important to Bick. She always wants to know more about it. Her involvement with the Peking opera helped establish some contacts for her in the art world. "Through someone at the Peking opera, I was introduced last year to the Institute in Research of Traditional Chinese Painting," she Courtney B. Vance, James Earl Jones in 'Fences'

'Fences,' student discount

By William Quinn, Senior Staff Writer

Specially priced discount tickets for students wanting to see August Wilson's Fences, the Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award-winning drama starring James Earl Jones, have been announced by the show's producers.

UCLA-Doolittle Theater operations manager Marilyn Rice said students with I.D. may buy seats for $10 one-half hour before showtime at any performance except Saturday night. Curtain is at 8 p.m. Tues.-Friday and 7:30 p.m. on Sunday. There are also Saturday and Sunday matinees at 2:30 for which the discount applies.

Ticket sales have been strong and are expected to build during the run which ends Dec. 4, said Rice. However, she is certain that 10 to 20 students definitely may be accommodated at each performance and probably more. The Dec. 4 closing is very firm at this time, she also said.

Although noting its awards which included Tonys for director, star and playwright, The Bruin's review last week thought that while the play's first act was well-nigh perfect, the second act failed. I do not, however, wish to discourage anyone from the experience.

hearing about Nazi Germany and thinking 'Oh god,' if I had been there, please let me of had the courage to stand up and do something about it. And I always wondered if I would have."

As a young woman, Lansing said she read about the Kitty Genovese murder, a crime where New Yorkers listened to a woman's screams for help but did nothing to aid her. "When the whole incident of New Bedford (a similar rape case to that portrayed in The Accused) came out in the paper, once again this issue came up.

"We wanted to do a movie about the the crime of not doing anything, about how the sin of omission is as great as the sin of comission, about the passivity of society," she said. Lansing and Jaffe didn't audition any writers for this project; they knew exactly who they wanted. Tom Topor, who wrote the original screenplay for Nuts, which was based on his original play, was called in on the film.

"We started to talk about bringing those people to trial, and we researched what kind of crime it would be," Lansing said. "We started to do research on rape; and much to our horror, we realized this was an epidemic that was happening in fraternity houses in college campuses, that there were thousands of New Bedford cases every year, that this crime was the most violent kind of crime, that there was nothing sexual about itw That at any given time, a woman has the right to say 'no.' We wanted to do a movie about those issues. So we made up the story."

Confusion does exist as to whether The Accused is actually a fictional account. But Lansing stressed that the screenplay is a composite, drawing from thousands of cases. "Unfortunately it happens thousands of times," she said.

"I hope that this movie will have an impact," Lansing said. "I hope that it will be a crime not to report a crime, where it's a felony if you don't report a crime and could."

Responsible filmmaking is an idea Lansing fervently believes in. "Film is the most powerful means of communication that there is," she explains, "you can do more with a movie than almost a senator can, because it has such an impact. I believe this film is going to be seen by millions of people, and they're going to be outraged. And those people are going to want to get legislation through. That's the responsibility filmmakers have."

If public reaction to Fatal Attraction is any measure, it shouldn't be long before rape-related stories are saturated in the media, becoming the buzzword on Oprah, Donahue and the covers of every tabloid at the supermarket check-out stand. But Lansing is not shying away from the possibility.

"It's (rape) a closet crime, and this is bringing it out of the closet," she said. "I hope this movie will help people who were raped, and most important, change our perception forever of rape. I don't see how anyone who sees this movie can ever look at a rape victim the same way, or at guys who admit they raped someone and say, 'Oh well,' they didn't do anything.

"I think a lot of people, until they see this movie, will always believe: a) That rape is sexual. When you see this movie you certainly don't think there's anything sexy about a rape, they'll think it's pure violence; and b) That the girl asked for it. When you see this movie you certainly don' think that the girl asked for it no matter what she was doing; and c) That guys will be guys. You don't think that. You think they're pretty horrible."

Bick was particularly impressed by what the Institute has provided for students in terms of the structure and spaces for living and working.

"They have studios where people can live in and do their painting in, has exhibition space, and built a garden with weeping willow trees and pond, a type of place where an artist could sit and ponder between their paintings."

Bick sees her role as a liaison to help connect other people from the West to the Institute. "The people at the Institute were very excited when I told them my plans. The director feels that 'We know much more about your art, you should know about ours.' Our goal is to have people come from all over the world and study and do research."

So Bick has been trying to initiate an exchange program for teachers, graduate students, even undergraduates. "The faculty may go for six months. Students can probably go for longer. Professors in arts are invited there for two weeks or so. They have provided trips for us to go into nature, in mountains, to do painting. But most of the time, we'll be at the institute where we can learn and bring information back."

Bick thinks that such an exchange program is quite feasible, and can happen in the near future. "I see it happening very soon," she said. "Probably, it could happen very soon through some sort of cultural exchange via our Extension program. It would be faster than through the regular UCLA channels."

According to Bick, there is no formal exchange program existing right now with the Institute in Beijing. "It's just a self-created thing of me and them working together. The directors at the Institute just started with their concept about how they're going to do this exchange thing. When they met me, they said they want to help coordinate something that's closer to my field.

"They are very thorough in what they teach," said Bick, commenting on the Institute's research capabilities. "They are able to give us the tradition, the historical sense, what people are doing in the present day, which I feel are important and for the sake of research."

She commented, however, that students will not be focused mainly on doing research. "They would more likely be learning how to do ink washes and Chinese painting technique," she said.

"I just want people to know that I'm involved in research in China, and connected with them, and that I'm here, and that students can contact me. Anyone interested in helping shape this program or wishing to participate can come to me," she said.

Harmon

good football player and get an education (from UCLA)," explained Harmon, who took 22 units in addition to football his first year after transferring. "If I had an opportunity to play pro sports, it would have to keep being fun. I got offers to go to camps, offers of money that I had never seen before . . . but I wanted to act. Compared to someone like Troy (Aikman, UCLA's current quarterback), I'm a midget. I don't think I was good enough. I tried to get into acting, but it was tough. There were no guarantees.'

After graduating, Harmon participated in night acting classes while holding an advertising job.

"I was a shoe salesman," he related (yes, a shoe salesman). "I remember coming back from a shoe convention in a plane and sitting next to another salesman who was struggling just to make his pension. I said to myself, 'where am I going?' I came back, went straight to the advertising office, threw my keys down and went into acting. At first, I was always the policeman that got shot, or the guy who kissed the girl and left, but I enjoyed what I was doing."

Harmon went on to guest star in two dozen roles on television series before he was featured in his film debut in Alan Pakula's Comes a Horseman in 1979 with Jane Fonda and Jason Robards. Harmon's most recent roles have been in The Presidio with Sean Connery and Meg Ryan, and Stealing Home with Jodie Foster.

About The Presidio:

"I've always been a fan of Meg, and in a very different way, a fan of Sean's. He's a guy, no B.S., just a guy. Anyone who had achieved the longevity he has is admirable. It was an enjoyable project."

About Stealing Home:

"It's one of those films that takes seven or eight years to get made. You do it because you love the project; box-officewise it hasn't done all that well, but that's not what it's about. It's a family picture with jokes; a very personal story by two writers. Jodie was great, a really talented lady."

Television roles has also been Harmon's genre, more so before he got onto the screen. He has been nominated for two Golden Globe awards, and has played feature roles on ABC's 240 Robert, NBC's Flamingo Road and St. Elsewhere.

"You have to play different roles," explained Harmon, "like switching from my kick back role in Summer School to a more serious role in Moonlighting. It's nice to be working and having choices, but an important thing is longevity, like Connery, Stewart, and Cagney. It's hard to do that."

Finally, what does successful Mark Harmon have to say to the budding actors/actresses of UCLA?

"Experience is important, education is important. Going to college has given me an edge over other people who haven't gone . . . taking part in school productions, just getting involved in anyway you can. A lot of courses put me behind the camera, but in the long run, it helped. It's a cliche, but in the long run, college is the best. I don't think that this (acting) is comfortable business to be in."

Hoosiers go big time

By Steve Herman
AP Sports Writer

Indiana's Hoosiers, ranked in The Associated Press college football poll for the first time this season, welcome the national exposure but can't forget the years of struggle it took to get it, Coach Bill Mallory said Monday.

Indiana, improving each year since Mallory's winless rookie season in 1984, earned the No. 18 ranking Monday after a 41-7 victory over Ohio State.

Miami, UCLA and Southern California remained the top three teams, while Notre Dame moved from fifth to fourth. The Irish replaced Auburn, which fell eight spots to 12th after a 7-6 loss to Louisiana State.

LSU, 3-2 and ranked 19th after a one-week absence from the poll, was the only other newcomer besides Indiana voted into this week's Top Twenty.

"The way I look at it, it's good exposure. It's important, but the big thing is we have our minds on the job each week, and the poll will take care of itself," said Mallory, whose Hoosiers are 4-0-1.

Indiana is 2-0 in the Big Ten Conference and tied with No. 15 Michigan and unranked Illinois for first place.

The only blemish on Indiana's record is a 28-28 tie with Missouri.

"It's good, but it boils down to what we do on Saturday, and that's where our focus of attention is," Mallory said of the national ranking.

It's also important, he said, that his players remember it wasn't long ago that the football program was at rock bottom, when Mallory succeeded Sam Wyche and became the third Indiana coach in three seasons. Mallory inherited a five-game losing streak and lost all 11 games in 1984 before the turnaround began. The Hoosiers were 4-7 in 1985, 6-6 in 1986 and 8-4 last year.

"You never forget where you've come from and how you got where you are," Mallory said. "You have to remind the younger players, too, who haven't gone through the things these other players have to be aware of what's gone into putting this program where it is today.

"Never allow that attitude of complacency to sit in. That'll cut your throat quicker than anything."

Since the start of the 1987 season, Indiana's 12-4-1 record is the best among all Big Ten teams, and the Hoosiers no longer are sneaking up on their opponents, Mallory said.

"I know the teams we play aren't surprised any more," he said. "They're all cranking up for us on the field. As we go along, people will begin to realize this."

Miami did not play over the weekend and held onto first place for the sixth week in a row. The Hurricanes received 52 of 56 first-place votes and 1,115 of a possible 1,020 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

UCLA remained No. 2 for the fifth week in a row by beating Oregon State 38-21. The Bruins received one first-place vote and 1,051 points.

Southern Cal, which had the remaining three first-place votes and 1,012 points, was third for the third straight week after a 42-14 victory over Oregon. The loss dropped the Ducks out of the Top 20 from the No. 18 spot.

Montana has some hurt ribs

The Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — San Francisco 49ers quarterback Joe Montana has been listed as questionable for Sunday's NFC West showdown with the Los Angeles Rams.

Montana, who suffered injured ribs when Denver defensive end Andre Townsend sacked him in overtime during Sunday's 16-13 loss, had X-rays taken Monday. No ribs were broken.

Coach Bill Walsh said a final determination on his status probably wouldn't be made until after Wednesday's practice. The team has Tuesday off.

"I have spoken with the team doctors, and they are guarded about whether he can start or play," said Walsh. "So if he can practice Wednesday, he most likely will start unless the ribs become agitated. If he can't practice, Steve Young will get the work and we'll go from there."

Montana said he was confident he would be able to play in the game at Anaheim Stadium.

"If they can block it (with a painkiller), I think I'll be all right to play," he said. "Right now it doesn't hurt unless I take a deep breath or cough."

Montana said he was wearing his flak jacket when Townsend sacked him, but the defensive end fell on top of him with the full thrust of his 265-pound frame.

"I was going down when he fell on top of me, and I heard something pop in my rib area," explained Montana. "His weight pinned me into the ground."

Team physician Dr. Michael Dillingham said there is no treatment for a cracked or bruised rib other than rest.

"They take about six weeks to heal," said Dillingham. "And a bruise can be as bad, or as painful, as a crack.

"As to whether or not he can play with it, it just matters how sore it is," Dillingham said. "A cracked rib isn't a serious issue, unless there is a shortness of breath. Then it may have punctured a lung."

Meanwhile, Walsh assailed Sunday's officiating at his weekly press gathering.

The 49ers were whistled for 14 penalties for 93 yards, which tied a club record for most penalties in a game. "I've looked at the films, and a number of them (calls) were either phantom or questionable," he charged. "It was a very strange scenario, especially late in the game when everyone knew the consequences of any penalty."

SOFTBALL TRYOUTS!

The defending NCAA champion UCLA women's softball team will be holding tryouts on Thursday, October 13 at Sunset Field. Players are advised to bring their own equipment. For further information, call Sue Enquist at 825-8699.

Women's football kicks off

By Patti Wagonhurst
Contributor

Approximately 25 teams will participate this year in women's IM flag football. While most of the squads hope to enjoy good competition and have fun, the Tri Delts are concentrating on only one thing: the championship.

"We're going to try and go for it again," said Stacy Albanese, Tri Delt's captain.

Last year, despite a number of injuries, Tri Delt defeated Alpha Chi Omega in the finals, 7-0. Although Lisa Agundez, last year's quarterback, has been lost to graduation, Tri Delt will have a very effective Wendy Sullivan calling the signals. Essentially, "Defense, offense, and everything else worked last year," according to Kelly Kaeser, Tri Delt's coach. "This year they just need to play hard, and I know they will."

Alpha Chi Omega, settling for second in the tournament last year, will have many of their key players back. Kandi Bryant will return to the squad to aid the team, which will also benefit from running back Marilee Konhorst.

Last year's consolation bracket winners also look hopeful. Although they lost in the first round, Alpha Delta Pi sailed through the consolation slate, knocking out Kappa Alpha Theta along the way. They should be tough competition this season.

Also returning are the Sigma Kappas, who finished second in the consolation bracket. "We have a very strong team with a lot of returning players, although we did lose a few," said Sharyl Allensworth, captain and quarterback for Sigma Kappa. Allensworth will be throwing deep again for the team this year. Another valuable player for Sigma Kappa is Beth Chapin, who should be a factor.

Women's IM flag football is a three game season with a post season single elimination tournament. Play begins Monday on the IM field.

Pigskin preview: Delta Sigma top team again

By Matt Purdue Staff Writer

It's that time of year again. The leaves will soon take on their plethora of golden hues and the crisp chill of autumn will descend on UCLA. And on the Intramural Field, the slap of pigskin and the grunts of the best Bruin gridders this side of the Rose Bowl will be heard.

LYNETTE TSAI/Daily Bruin

ALL THE RIGHT MOVES: Cuts and slashes such as these can be seen in the upcoming women's IM football season.

IM flag football is once again upon us.

While the women's and coed teams offer their own brands of excitement, the hardest hitting comes when the men lace up their cleats. Following is one writer's assessment of the strongest men's teams, taking into account last season's records and this season's outlook. Monday's and yesterday's games are not included.

Until someone can knock them off, the men from Delta Sigma Phi remain kings of the hill. Delta Sigma has been buildingsomething of a dynasty over on Landfair Avenue as they've won the last three "A" league titles. Although they have lost some key players to graduation, they look like they can win number four.

New signal-caller Andy Babb will look for the likes of receivers Eddie Edwards, Rick Tsurnaga and Dan Wagner. If Babb and his corps can get their timing together early, Delta Sigma should roll into the playoffs.

After making it to the final eight of last year's playoffs; Alpha Tau Omega looks set to jump into the IM elite. While most Top 10 teams are breaking in new arms, ATO's Jim Keehn begins his third campaign. Keehn, arguably the best quarterback in IM football, will seek out receivers Tom Waskaiewicz, Sean Maloney, and Andrew Purner.

The only question marks are on the line, which loses All-IM player Doug Cox, along with Chris Coufal and Tom Zarka. Linemen Phil Andrews and Matt Francis need to provide some muscle if ATO is to make it to the finals.

It's a family affair at Sigma Alpha Epsilon, so to speak. They lose QB Rick Gustafson, who led his squad to the final game last season, but brother Jeff should fill in admirably. Ted Horvorka, a former linebacker at Air Force, should have the line flying right. SAE did lose three key players, but a good pledge class should fill some of the holes.

Phi Kappa Psi, after a semi-final appearance, has reportedly improved. Two-thirds of the squad return under the leadership of new quarterback John Balousek, and if Phi Psi has really gotten better, they may very well be appearing in the finals.

The hopes of Sigma Nu rest on the arm of passer Bobby Hattfield. Hattfield should be able to handle IM football pressure, as the transfer student formerly quarterbacked at Cal Poly SLO. Returning receivers J. P. Scandalious and Kyle Ketchum should provide Hattfield with fine targets.

Six members of the defense return to a Sigma Nu squad that lost to champion Delta Sigma in the semi-finals last year, so keep your eyes on this team, another potential finalist.

Sigma Chi could surprise some people. Quarterback Bill Miller returns after sitting out last year, and if he can get back into gear, this team could shake up the rankings. Tim McLean will use his athletic talents at safety and receiver. Also, the fact that Sigma Chi lost only two players from last season's final eight team puts them in contention for the final four this time.

The seventh and eighth ranked teams, Zeta Beta Tau and the mysterious Bacculum, respectively, were hard to get a hold of this week, so scouting reports are sparse. Both squads made the quarterfinals last year and there's no reason to believe they can't do it again.

Monster Kingdom is another strong non-frat team. They return six players from last year's team that lost to ZBT in a first round Mud Bowl playoff game.

Last but not least, Delta Tau Delta is a team that could go a long way just as easily as it could go nowhere. They return all but three players from last season's first round losers. If new QB Joe Diaz can provide some inspiration to this somewhat laid-back squad, the Delts should improve on last year.

TAYLOR: Cal quarterback

Taylor as the No. 6 quarterback in the country in its preseason issue.

"Troy Taylor knows their system well," assessed Terry Donahue this week. "He exploited several areas of our defense last year, and one of my big worries is that he'll be able to do that against us this year."

"He did a good job against us last year," chimed in UCLA's Troy (Aikman). "I think he's a good quarterback. He's a competitor."

Indeed, Troy Taylor will be the focus of the Cal offense when the UCLA Bruins (5-0 overall, 2-0 in the Pac-10) invade Strawberry Canyon in Berkeley to face the Golden Bears (3-2, 0-2). More pressure than usual will be on Taylor because top rusher Chris Richards is injured and may see only limited action.

As Bears coach Bruce Snyder termed it, Cal's offensive performance against Washington State last Saturday, "was a mystery."

The "mystery" lies in the fact that Cal had no less than 30 first downs and 505 yards in total offense, and yet scored only one touchdown in a 44-13 loss to the Cougars.

Bear offensive problems centered mainly on the failure to come away with points inside what they call the "Critical Zone," that is, inside the opponent's 25-yard line.

Talking about Taylor and his role in this year's offense, Snyder said, "Statistically speaking, yards gained, passes completed, etcetera, Troy has done really well. I would say that he doesn't feel that good about his start because we haven't gotten it into the end zone.

"He needs to handle the ball better down close (to the goal line). He has moved the team well," Synder concluded.

As Synder pointed out, Taylor has put up some pretty fair numbers this season. Through five games, he has completed 99 of 159 attempts (.623) for 1,186 yards and 8 touchdowns.

He has, however, also been picked off 11 times, including three times in each of the last three games after only being intercepted once in the first two contests.

Taylor's best game in '88 was Sept. 24 against Kansas. The 6-4 Rancho Cordova native ripped the Jayhawks for three touchdowns and 281 yards on 27 of 36 passing. He did throw three passes to the guys in the wrong colored jerseys, though.

Against Washington State, Taylor had an average day, completing 16 of 29 for 223 and 1 touchdown. But once again, there were three interceptions.

The interception problems are somewhat of a surprise for Taylor. In 1987, Taylor had 18 TDs and 12 interceptions, a good ratio for quarterbacks not named Aikman. This season, however, Taylor has thrown more interceptions than touchdowns, something that does not make the coaches happy.

According to assistant coach Terry Shea, who serves as Cal's quarterbacks coach and offensive coordinator, Taylor was "stunned" early in the first quarter against the Cougars and it seemed to affect him.

Shea sees Taylor's decisions about when and where to throw the ball as the major factor leading to the increased number of interceptions this season.

In addition, "He's just a little bit off sometimes," said Shea. "He throws with a lot of touch, and if he is off by a step or two then. . .the defensive players find it a catchable ball too."

Potent threat

The most important thing to remember about Taylor is that when he gets hot, there is literally no stopping him.

For example, in the last nine touchdown drives he led before he smashed his finger on an Arizona State lineman's helmet, Taylor completed an amazing 34 of 37 attempts for 506 yards. He accounted for six of those touchdowns with scoring passes.

In the same vein, in the Bears' six touchdown drives in the upsets of Oregon and Arizona State Taylor made good on 27 of 28 passes for 333 yards and passed for four of the TDs.

The UCLA defense got torched by Oregon State QB Erik Wilhelm, who passed for 309 yards and three scores. It will be a challenge for the Bruins to contain Taylor.

"We think Taylor is really a productive quarterback who has been a little snakebit by the interception factor," concluded Shea.

NOTES: Though he has played in just 20 games in his two years plus at Cal, Taylor is in some heady company on the all-time passing charts. He has thrown for 4,158 career yards, putting him in fifth place, ahead of Joe Roth. He needs only 277 yards to move past Steve Bartkowski into fourth place, and only 344 to be ranked third, passing Craig Morton. .Taylor ran for a career-high 56 yards against the Cougs. .Taylor is No. 12 in the nation and third in the Pac-10 in total offense with his average of 253.6 yards per game.

Watching the debate on TV beats playing in the band

Leisure Town

Matt Goldstein

"Connect me with the Chuckster," I ordered, stretching a handkerchief over the mouthpiece of the pay phone.

"May I ask who's calling?" asked a polite, secretarial voice.

"This is Mayor Tom Bradley," I lied, "powerful UCLA alumnus."

"That's simply not true, sir," asserted the chancellor's personal secretary. "Who is this really?"

"I will not tolerate insolence, miss!" I hollered, trying desperately to sound severe and mayoral. "If you don't believe me, just ask my wife." I passed the phone to my right hand, cleared my throat and broke into a falsetto. "Listen, honey," I squeaked, "my husband, Mayor Tom Bradley, powerful UCLA alumnus, wants to talk to your boss, and if you—"

"Cut the Rich Little routine and tell me who you are, and why you'd like to speak with the chancellor," she interrupted.

"O.K., this is the Lizard King, rocker/poet Jim Morrison, and before I made it big with my band, the Doors, I was a dedicated UCLA student. I figured that, since I'm such an illustrious alumnus, Chuck would set me up with a couple of tickets for Thursday's Dukakis/Bush debate in Pauley."

"He's dead, sir."

"My God!" I cried, "Chancellor Young is dead? I'm terribly sorry. . . ."

"No, sir, the chancellor is fine," she explained, "Jim Morrison is dead."

"This is Mark Harmon," I tried half-heartedly.

"No, it's not."

"That guy who played Eugene on 'Mork and Mindy'?"

"Look," she said sternly, "if you want to get into the debate, try this: Don a Bruin basketball jersey with the number 52 on it, and walk right in. I guarantee that you'll be able to get in and slipping into my real voice.

"Craig Jackson wore number 52," she said, " and he managed to remain completely invisible in Pauley Pavilion for four long years."

I was devastated. Every request for press passes that I had made had been flatly denied; a three-day bivouac in a Pauley men's room stall had resulted only in a humiliating late-night phone call to my parents from a UCPD holding cell, a $500 trespassing fine and an overnight stay in the Neuropsychiatric Institute; and thousands of telephone calls had got me only a cauliflower ear.

The presidential debate, which represented the biggest event to occur in Pauley Pavilion since UCLA beat Dean Smith's Tar Heels on December 1, 1986, was only a few, short days away, and it was becoming more inaccessible by the minute.

In a vain attempt to get passes from the Daily Bruin, I formulated a number of half-baked story ideas with lame sports angles. "Yale's Influence on the Presidencies of A. Bartlett Giamatti and George Bush," "Parallel Quarrels: Bush/Dukakis and Tyson/Givens," and "How the NIT Banner Looks During a Presidential Debate," however, were all deemed unnewsworthy, and I was still out in the cold.

Just as I passed the commotion, Gordo abruptly stopped the band to loudly upbraid some tuba player who, due to a mouthful of chocolate Teddy Grahams, had neglected to scream "Tequila!" at the appropriate moment.

"We're playing for the vice president of the United States and the governor of Massachusetts tomorrow night, Davey," boomed Henderson, "and if you want to ruin it for everyone, you just continue snacking!" Henderson insulted Davey's parents, picked up his baton and struck up the band. Davey stood sobbing for a moment, then walked off the field dejectedly.

BRUIN FILE PHOTO
Does Michael Dukakis (or Bruin Hoops fans?) need to hear 'Tequila' again?

Davey wiped his nose on his forearm, peeled his shirt and handed me his instrument. "Deal," he said softly.

I pulled the jersey on, slipped into the tuba and fell into formation. I faked the fingering on "Would I Lie to You" and "Ol' Time Rock 'n' Roll," and I managed to shout "Tequila!" at just the right time. I am not certain, but I think I saw Gordon nod approvingly in my direction.

"Hey, Davey!" I called, seizing the opportunity, "I'll buy you a waffle-cone sundae at the Cooperage and pay for a couple games of Double Dragon at the arcade if you'll lend me your tuba and your band uniform."

After about eight hours of practice, Gordo called it a day. "All right, gang," yelled Gordo enthusiastically, "pile into the buses, and we'll be at my house in no time." I looked around nervously. "This will be the best darn UCLA Band slumber party ever!" he yelled, raising his hands triumphantly above his head.

I abandoned Davey's tuba in a dumpster, threw his shirt into some bushes and decided to watch the debate on television.

Athletes of the week

Anton Nistl

Anton Nistl has a new theme—a theme more often heard in the classrooms of the nation uttered by the wife of our current President.

That theme, of course, is: Just Say No.

But the words are applicable to Nistl's goalkeeping for the UCLA men's soccer team. Lately, Nistl has been tending goal with a fury, recording six shutouts in the Bruins' last nine games to help UCLA in its climb over .500 as a team.

Nistl earned defensive most valuable player honors at the Pac-10 soccer tournament held last weekend in Berkeley, as he recorded two shutouts.

Nistl now has 20 career shutouts, tying him for third place on the all-time UCLA list. His goal-against average is now a sparkling 0.92, fourth-best on the west coast.

For the second consecutive week, junior middle blocker Daiva Tomkus has earned the right to be the Daily Bruin's female athlete of the week.

And why not? After all, give credit where credit is due.

And Tomkus deserves a lot of credit. The UCLA women's volleyball team headed off to Arizona last weekend with hopes of improving their first-place status in the Pacific 10 and remaining undefeated.

Against Arizona State, Tomkus registered 14 kills while hitting a red-hot .520. She also had 17 digs, three blocks and two aces as the Bruins swept the Sun Devils in three games.

Against Arizona, Tomkus followed up with 12 kills while hitting .478. She had four digs and two blocks as the Bruins had an easy time with the Cats in three straight games.

At this pace, Tomkus figures to lock up All-America honors for the second consecutive year.

Spikers escape from Troy's dungeon

Undefeated volleyball beats Southern Cal

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Ann Boyer. . .

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

When the UCLA women's volleyball team entered USC's North Gym Tuesday night for an interconference match-up, it was the last time that the Bruins would ever have to play in "the Dungeon", as the gym is affectionately called.

But at least the Bruins know that their last match in the unfriendly confines of the North gym was a victorious one as UCLA kept up its undefeated record with a four-game win, 5-15, 15-6, 15-7 and 15-8.

The match did not start quite as well as Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski may have wanted. The Trojans came storming out in game one, building a nine point lead before UCLA was able to strike back. USC easily captured the game, 15-5.

Senior setter and All-American Ann Boyer took charge in game two, guiding the offense around Trojan defensive strengths. Outside hitter Jenny Crocker was Boyer's main target in game two. The Bruins eventually won, 15-6.

In game three, the Bruins picked up where they left off. UCLA scored eight straight points before the Trojans could strike back. The Bruins went on to win, 15-7.

Game four was the nail-biting climax of the match. The Bruins and Trojans remained neck and neck through most of the game until UCLA broke loose after a 7-7 tie. The Bruins went on to win the game—and the match—in the crucial fourth game, 15-8.

The victory over USC is the 14th straight for UCLA, which now holds a 7-0 conference record.

Taylor trying not to be the 'other' Troy

Cal quarterback to lead Golden Bears

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Troy Taylor scrambles away from Chance Johnson in last year's UCLA-Cal game.

By Michael Bartlett
Staff Writer

How much does Troy Taylor mean to the Cal football team?

Let's just let the results speak for themselves:

— Last year, playing as just a sophomore, Taylor showed his brilliance in a four-game streak that saw the previously doormat Bears tie Arizona, extend UCLA, beat Oregon in Eugene and beat Arizona State at home. The only thing that stopped Taylor's momentum was a finger injury against the Sun Devils.

— Without Taylor in the final two games of 1987, the Cal passing game struggled. Brad Howe hit 2 of 9 attempts for only 26 yards while finishing up against ASU, then went 11 of 22 for 117 yards and throwing two interceptions in a loss to Stanford. Howe finished the year by completing 16 of 30 for 166 yards while tossing two more interceptions, as the Bears tied Washington State.

— Playing in just those nine games, Taylor still managed to throw for a school-record 18 touchdown passes in a season.

— Against the Bruins in the Rose Bowl last year, Taylor brought the Bears to within three points of UCLA in the third quarter at 21-18 before the Bruins flexed their muscles and raced to a 42-18 victory. On the day, Taylor completed 21 of 35 for 312 yards, the most passing yards gained against UCLA all year.

— In a conference bulging with top signal callers, Taylor finished fourth last year in the Pac-10 in both passing yards per game and passing efficiency. He completed 60.8 percent of his passes (second only to Troy Aikman in the league) for a total of 2,081 yards. Taylor had an excellent efficiency rating of 136.4 to place behind no less than Aikman, USC's Rodney Peete and Oregon's Bill Musgrave.

— Taylor has done well enough in his short collegiate career to earn notice from one of the leading national magazines. The Sporting News ranked

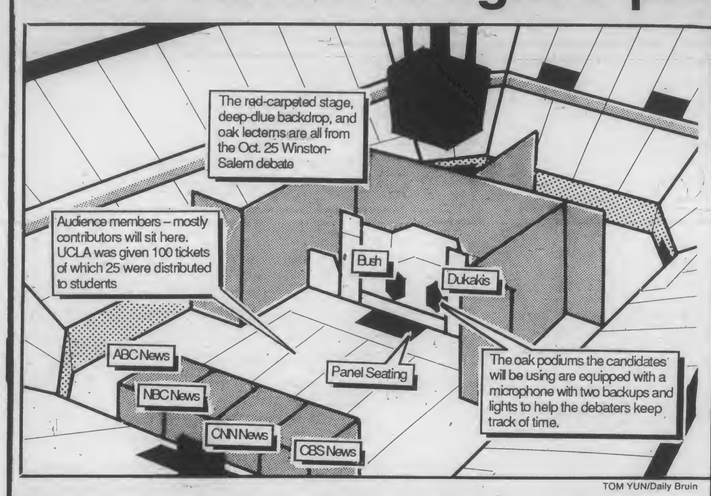
DEBATE '88 UCLA

UCLA awaits tonight's presidential debate



TOM YUN/Daily Bruin

George Bush

Michael Dukakis

Facing off in Pauley Pavilion

Time: 6:00 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Place: Pauley Pavilion seats 13,000. Debate organizers have distributed 2,000 tickets for tonight's event.

Format: Michael Dukakis has two minutes to answer the first question. George Bush has one minute to rebut; then they reverse for the next question and so on until final statements.

Questioners: Bernard Shaw, CNN (moderator); Ann Compton, ABC; Andrea Mitchell, NBC; Margaret Warner, Newsweek.

Preparations for debate done

Media installed in Pavilion, millions expected to watch

By Shana Chandler and Jacki McKimmy
Staff Writers

At 3 a.m. this morning, network newscasts began broadcasting live from inside Pauley Pavilion. At 6 a.m. the Secret Service closed the Pavilion for a security sweep. The presidential candidates will rehearse privately for one hour each this morning, and at 6:02 p.m., the last debate of the 1988 campaign will begin.

An estimated 60 to 65 million people will watch tonight's clash between Vice President George Bush and Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis, according to Edward Fouhy, the event's executive producer from the Commission on Presidential Debates.

To prepare for the event, 37 miles of cables and approximately 412 telephones have been installed on campus, Fouhy explained at a press briefing yesterday.

By Wednesday afternoon, the Pavilion's sound and lighting systems had been overhauled completely by the Commission in order to avoid malfunctions during the debate. Every light will be insured by a backup bulb, and every microphone will have two backups, Fouhy said.

The checks and double checks will hopefully avoid a replay of the 1976 debate between former Presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter during which the candidates were "mute" for 23 minutes because of an audio failure, Fouhy recalled.

Although the Pavilion will be flooded with light during the debate, the temperature should not exceed a controlled 70 degrees, Fouhy said.

During the debate, he said, "the candidates may sweat, but not because of the temperature."

Network booths have been built inside the Pavilion for post-debate coverage by ABC, CBS, CNN and NBC. The debate moderator will be CNN's Bernard Shaw, and the panelists are Ann Compton (ABC), Andrea Mitchell (CBS) and Margaret Warner (Newsweek).

"UCLA is a big time university and is used to big time events," Fouhy said.

Total costs to produce the UCLA debate are expected to exceed $500,000, according to

UCLA political, media experts preview final presidential face-off

By Irena Auerbuch
Staff Writer

When Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and Vice President George Bush debate tonight, stakes will be high and their differences clear, UCLA experts say.

"There is considerable pressure on Dukakis to do very well . . . all Bush has to do is show up, recite his lines and not appear to be a total fool," observed Shanto Iyengar, an associate professor of political science, while Communication Studies lecturer Jeffrey Cole believes that "the debates in general can only help Michael Dukakis and hurt George Bush."

John Zaller, an assistant professor of political science who teaches a course entitled "Political Parties and the Electoral Process," considers media interpretation to be the only significant factor in determining the outcome of the debate.

Bush, Dukakis prime for last debate

By David Espo
Associated Press

Neither George Bush nor Michael Dukakis came in contact with the voters on Wednesday, huddling instead with their handlers to go over lines for today's second and final presidential debate of the campaign.

Bush staged a brief made-for-television event before disappearing into his debate preparation meetings. He invited Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates in for breakfast in a subtle continuation of his effort to make crime control a central theme of his candidacy.

The vice president told reporters he intended to show the country "what my heartbeat is" during his face-to-face clash with Dukakis and said he would continue depicting his rival as a liberal. Bush also arranged to attend the National League playoff game between the Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Mets after wrapping up his debate preparation for the day.

Democrat Dukakis had baseball on his mind as well as he interrupted his debate homework to play catch with an aide while photographers recorded the scene. Referring to the first presidential debate and the one last week between running mates, he said, "We're ahead 2-0; we're going to make it a clean sweep."

He described his debate repertoire in baseball lingo,

Actor Mark Harmon speaks on days at UCLA, image, roles

Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

Actor Mark Harmon walked onto the MacGowan Hall stage at noon yesterday exuding the air of an an easy-going football player who somehow stumbled into the wrong class.

Clad in black cowboy boots and a casual gray tweed suit, the former UCLA quarterback at first seemed surprised to be regaled by whistles, screams and hundreds of adoring eyes staring up at him, but he managed to take it all in stride.

"Don't you guys have anything better to do than to listen to the opinions of a flaky actor?" he asked. The audience assured him the contrary.

That was his cue. Harmon quickly established an intimate rapport with his fellow Bruins, answering all questions candidly, eliciting delighted laughter from the crowd.

His opinions seemed to be heartfelt.

"I've always wanted to be on the stage at MacGowan," he said. Harmon, who was on a football scholarship at UCLA from 1972 to 1974, said that he tried to take classes in the theater arts department, but that he could never get in. Instead he designed for himself the communications major, which was not a UCLA program at that time.

Harmon took 22 units in addition to football in his first year after transferring from a junior college and graduated Cum Laude.

Harmon admitted that it was difficult to do both academics and sports while he was at school. "I was here because I was on a football scholarship,

Student falls to death

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

A UCLA student fell to her death at Hedrick Hall Wednesday evening after police were unable to persuade her to step down from a seventh-floor windowsill.

The student, an 18-year-old woman who lived in Hedrick, was pronounced dead at 10:57 p.m. at UCLA Medical Center, according to UCPD Sgt. Kathy Stanley.

At press time, the student's identity was not released because her parents had not been notified by police, Stanley said.

Police had not determined if the death was a suicide.

Hedrick Hall staff called the police at 10:08 p.m. and reported a student sitting on the windowsill with her feet dangling outside the floor's northeast corner. Three minutes later, four UCPD officers arrived at the scene.

Sgt. Rick Sanchez went up to the seventh floor to speak with the student, while two other officers waited outside the residence hall, below the window.

Officers Al Hernandez and John Adams saw the student fall and land on her feet at 10:16 p.m. The two officers immediately administered cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

An ambulance from the Los Angeles Police Department transported the student to UCLA Medical Center, where she was pronounced dead.

Access monitor Javier Pinon was taking a break in his room on the seventh floor when he saw the student sitting on the ledge.

According to Pinon, he asked her if she was all right, and the student told him to just leave her alone.

After the ambulance took the student to the hospital, officers collected a pack of cigarettes, a mug and a left shoe from the scene.

School merger protested

Parents uneasy over plans for UCLA facility

By Irena Auerbuch, Staff Writer

The possibility of merging UCLA's University Elementary School with the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District has stirred up apprehension and anger in parents of UES students, while UCLA's administration maintains that the merger would not occur unless it was beneficial to UES.

Parents have expressed concern about not being included in the preliminary talks currently in progress between UES and SMMUSD. Another subject of concern is the possible loss of UES' autonomy and research emphasis at UES as a result of the merger. UES is a laboratory school of UCLA's Graduate School of Education (GSE).

Additionally, parents are upset by the possibility that UES might be moved from its current site in the northwestern part of the UCLA campus to a new site in Santa Monica if the merger goes through.

However, Executive Vice Chancellor Murray Schwartz, who has participated in the preliminary talks, sees the situation in a different light.

"There is no point for UCLA to be running an elementary school if (the school) is not on a university research mission," Schwartz said. "We would not move UES to an environment that would not satisfy us."

Betsy Braun, president of the UES Family School Alliance (FSA), expressed some doubt about the administration's position.

"We are committed not to the land but to the philosophy of the school," she said. "If we could have a guarantee that they would move the school but the philosophy and the governance and the autonomy of the school would remain exactly the same, we would have no problem. Unfortunately we cannot have that guarantee."

Other parents, such as Cindy Wang, believe that they have not been taken into consideration during the talks with SMMUSD.

"No effort has been made to keep the parents informed," Wang commented. "I feel that whatever we say or do won't really make a difference or affect the decision making."

Campus elementary school 'one of best in U.S.' says principal

By Irena Auerbuch, Staff Writer

Many factors combine to make the Corrine A. Seeds University Elementary School perhaps one of the "best schools in the United States," according to Hal Hyman, its principal.

"What makes (UES) different is that it does not fall under the mandate of state educational laws," he explained in a telephone interview. "This gives it the capability to create the finest educational opportunities in the state and in the world."

Seeds-UES is a laboratory school of the UCLA Graduate School of Education which functions not only as an elementary school but also as a center for education-related research. Teachers, school administrators, nurses and librarians are trained there as well, Hyman said.

UCLA grad student arrested for murders

By May Wong
Staff Writer

A UCLA graduate student was arrested Tuesday night for the murders of two persons whom he allegedly shot earlier that day.

Xiaodong Bai, a graduate student and teaching assistant of the East Asian Languages and Cultures department, is now in custody at the West Los Angeles Police station. The police have not yet determined the 30-year-old's motive for the murders of Rosa Molina, 54, and Michael Kampf, 57.

"He did not make any statements about (his motive) at all," said Detective Steve Osti of the West Los Angeles Police Department's Homicide Division.

Molina, a clerk for the Outpatient Department at the UCLA Medical Center, was fatally shot in front of her 1671 Federal Avenue apartment complex at around 5:30 p.m.

While retreating to his own apartment in the same complex as Molina's, Bai encountered Kampf and shot him. Kampf, who lived a block away from Bai on Barry Avenue, died shortly after at the UCLA Medical Center.

Bai barricaded himself in his apartment after the incident. He finally surrendered at 9:20 p.m. after the police established telephone contact with him.

The police recovered an Uzi submachine gun and a .357 magnum revolver in Bai's apartment. Molina and Kampf were shot with the Uzi, Osti reported.

Witnesses said they saw Molina and Bai emerge from the apartment building together, according to Osti. They then saw her shot dead on the ground, he added.

After papers are filed today at the district attorney's office, Bai will be arraigned. Preliminary hearings will be in about two weeks.

Both families of the victims have been notified.

Female jobless rate drops, governor says

By Richard De Atley
Associated Press

George Deukmejian

LOS ANGELES — Self-employment is the fast track for California's working women, and unemployment among females in the job market has nearly been cut in half, Gov. George Deukmejian told a businesswomen's conference Wednesday.

"One of the most promising developments is that in California, women-owned businesses, which now generate $12 billion in annual sales, are increasing faster than those owned by men," the governor told the Fourth Annual Governor's Conference on Women in Business at the downtown Westin Bonaventure Hotel.

"Self-employed are the fastest growing group of working women," the governor told a crowded auditorium of delegates at the state-sponsored event. "In the past eight years, the number of women-owned businesses in California has increased by nearly 55 percent," Deukmejian said in his keynote address.

The governor also said the unemployment rate for women seeking work five years ago was above 10 percent, but currently stands at 5.4 percent.

Deukmejian also cited issues of concern for working women, including child care, equal opportunity for employment, education and health care.

He claimed California now spends more than $500 million a year in child care services and tax credits, and told delegates he recently signed into legislation a law offering tax credits to businesses that provide child care to their employees. The credit has a limit of 30 per-

Palestinian tactics change

Guns, grenades used more frequently

By Nicolas B. Tatro

JERUSALEM — Soldiers blew up four Palestinian homes and sealed five others Wednesday in reprisal for the murder of Arabs who collaborated with Israel. Palestinians hurled a grenade at a troop bus but missed.

Noting an increased use of guns and grenades by Palestinian activists, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin suggested there had been a shift in Palestinian tactics from stones to more sophisticated weapons.

"Once they shift from civilian violence to terror for me it is proof that they failed to achieve their goals by what they call the intefadeh," Rabin said, using the Arabic word for uprising.

But clashes continued between soldiers and demonstrators in the occupied territories with hospital officials reporting four Palestinians wounded, three of them with plastic bullets.

In the Gaza Strip, sources said a grenade was thrown between a bus carrying soldiers and a civilian car. The army said no injuries resulted, and soldiers sealed the area and detained a number of Palestinians.

A day earlier, a grenade was thrown at an army jeep, wounding two soldiers in the legs.

Rabin, speaking to a Foreign Press Association luncheon, noted Wednesday's incident was the third time grenades had been hurled in the recent days and that a village leader had been shot to death with an assault rifle by PLO enforcers.

He said terror attacks had declined in the occupied lands in the past 10 months as Palestinian activists focused on large-scale demonstrations and stone-throw-

Marcos may be offered deal

By Yasmin Arquiza

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino's government indicated today it may delay filing criminal charges against Ferdinand Marcos so that U.S. authorities can go ahead with their own prosecution of the ousted president.

The move followed reports that State Department legal officer Abraham Sofaer recommended Marcos be offered a deal under which he would avoid prison but surrender millions of dollars he allegedly embezzled during his 20-year rule.

A statement issued by Mateo Caparas, chairman of the Presidential Commission on Good Government, said Marcos would have the right to return to the Philippines after criminal charges are filed here.

But the statement added that the reported American plea bargain proposal "would seem to confirm. . . that the efforts of former President Marcos to come back to the Philippines is really for the purpose of escaping imminent indictment for crimes committed by him in the United States after his arrival there."

"Our national interest. . . requires that we do not permit our filing of criminal charges here to be used as an excuse by Mr. Marcos to escape his indictment abroad," Caparas added.

Caparas, whose commission is charged with recovering Marcos' allegedly embezzled funds, told reporters Aquino had asked him

SEAT THE HUNGRY

While some sit and study or socialize, others go hungry. Everyday, during the lunch and dinner hours, thousands use the campus' restaurants but hundreds can't find seats. Help solve the seating shortage. If it's between 11 am and 2 pm or 5 pm and 7 pm and it's crowded, offer your table when you've finished your meal to someone looking for a place to sit. Better yet, offer to share your table with someone. And if you're looking for a seat, don't be afraid to challenge those sitting to seat the hungry.

USAC discusses diversity

Dispute over wording puts hold on resolution

By Holly Bauer, Staff Writer

A resolution on student representation caused a one-hour discussion at the Undergraduate Students Association Council's Tuesday night meeting, which ended only in postponement of the matter.

USAC resolutions need to be approved by the council, and usually state its position on selected issues.

Proposed by Academic Affairs Commissioner Florencia Aranovich, the resolution would state USAC's recognition of the need for diversity. It was designed "to make a statement that USAC is going to . . . look for diversity in student appointments, which hasn't always been the case in past years."

Aranovich said that the resolution would "make students feel that USAC does care, that we're all represented."

USA President Michael Meehan denounced the resolution. "I'm sort of against resolutions that don't do anything," he said, reminding the council that much of what the resolution stated was already included in the USAC Constitution.

This summer, Aranovich accused Meehan of only appointing white males to student governmen-nt positions Summer Bruin, July 12). Meehan had refuted the charges by saying that he had picked the most qualified applicants.

Several council members disputed the resolution's wording.

Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss cited Campus Programming Committee and Campus Activities Committee appointments, which include two white females, two minority females, and four minority males, as examples of diversity. He also voted against the resolution's words.

When asked what action would be taken if it passed, Aranovich brainstormed that a task force may be feasible.

Community Service Commissioner John Sarvey said that a task force was not needed. The proposal would be a reminder to USAC and future councils, he explained.

Because Meehan is still currently making USAC appointments, he viewed the proposed resolution as "an attack on this current council."

But Aranovich said the council was "reading between the lines when there is really nothing there to be read."

She questioned the tabling of the resolution, because "I feel that people are opposed to what they think they are seeing . . . This is aimed at the future."

If the resolution can be reworded, the council will vote on it next week.

Campus Events not granted funds for trip

By Holly Bauer
Staff Writer

The Campus Events Commission may not be able to attend a conference for student programming, after being denied a $463-funding request at USAC's Oct. 11 meeting.

The funds would have been used for a hotel room, and to send two additional members to the National Association for Campus Activities (NACA), where bookings for the commission are arranged.

Campus Events is already providing for two members to attend the three-day conference, which will be held at the Airport Marriott Hotel in November.

Campus Events Commissioner Greg Ambrose said that all three directors and himself must attend in order for UCLA to be properly represented.

But many council members challenged the request, which was eventually denied.

General Representative Mike Spence said he did not think it was fair to use the student body's money for two more people to attend. Concerning the need for a hotel room, he said he would rather transport the UCLA participant himself, because the conference is only 10 minutes away.

Ambrose said, however, that without a hotel room, the commission won't be able to make the contacts for bookings with other schools.

"We're talking about great programming as a result. We're talking about saving

Company pleads guilty to fraud

Reaches $115 million settlement with Pentagon

By David Rocks
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Sundstrand Corp. has agreed to plead guilty to federal fraud charges and pay a $115 million settlement for overbilling the Pentagon for airplane parts over five years, federal prosecutors said Wednesday.

U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas said the settlement includes "tens of millions of dollars" in penalties against the Rockford-based aerospace contractor.

"You have a company that set out to defraud the government," he said at a news conference. "The only way that type of activity can be deterred is through swift legal action."

Valukas would not estimate the cost of Sundstrand's actions to the government.

A further investigation of individuals at Sundstrand will be completed in two or three months, he said, noting the plea agreement calls for the company to cooperate in that probe.

Sundstrand spokesman Claude Vernam said he could not immediately comment on the plea agreement.

Sundstrand makes flight-data equipment, engine start-up systems and other electronic equipment for military and commercial aircraft.

"Sundstrand has provided a good-quality product for a long period of time. Unfortunately, we've been paying too much for it," Francis Holland, regional commander of Defense Contract Administration Services, said at the news conference.

Sundstrand may be barred from further contracts with the Defense Department pending an investigation, spokesman Larry Wilson of the department's Defense Logistics Agency said from Washington.

Wilson said before the company would do business with the government again, the Defense Department would check changes in Sundstrand's accounting system that would prevent a recurrence. Also, he said any high-ranking officers involved in the defraud should be suspended.

Sundstrand has agreed to plead guilty to a four-count criminal information produced by a federal grand jury in Rockford.

The document accuses the company of submitting intentionally low bids on contracts from 1981 to 1985 and then concealing the extra costs in general overhead costs.

Association links alumni, students

By Kelly Barnes
Contributor

Beginning its fifth year, the Student Alumni Association has many programs with opportunities for students, faculty and alumni to participate.

Ted Chen, SAA President, said a major goal of SAA is "to provide a link between students and alumni with activities both can participate in." He would like to see more of a balance with student and alumni members, as alumni have been outnumbered by students in the past.

He noted their rapid growth over the last five years. "They began with only half the programs they now offer," he said.

SAA will emphasize the Career Network this year. They want to expand the program by pairing up more students with alumni members who work in a field of interest. For instance, a panel of political science alumni will discuss their careers with students who are interested in the same field.

SAA also plans to have less formal "fireside" chats for students to get to know alumni and discuss career options.

The Career Exploration Program will match a student to an alumni member for a day on the job of the alumni.

Chen said SAA plans to make this service available to all students with a goal of having it available year-round. SAA recruits the alumni, then students look through a list to choose an alumnus for a Career Exploration Day.

Homecoming festivities will have a few additions this year with a graduate student open house, an International Students' Association food fair and a

New Czech premier assumes leadership

Ruler shows little indication of pursuing economic, social reforms

The Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Premier Ladislav Adamec and his Cabinet were sworn in Wednesday, one day after the most sweeping leadership changes since a Soviet-led invasion ended Alexander Dubcek's liberal "Prague spring" of 1968.

Adamec replaces Lubomir Strougal, 64, who resigned Monday after 18 years as premier and also gave up his seat on the ruling Communist Party Politburo.

President Gustav Husak, replaced as party chief in December by Milos Jakes, administered the oath. Husak had led the party since Dubcek was ousted.

In his acceptance speech, Adamec appeared to confirm expectations that he would not have Strougal's enthusiasm for the kind of economic and social reform being promoted by Mikhail S. Gorbachev in the Soviet Union.

"We must carry out the program of restructuring," he said, but "we have no magic wand with which we could change things overnight," according to a report by the official news agency CTK.

Adamec, a 62-year-old former premier of the Czech Republic and deputy federal premier, often has criticized poor economic performance. He said Wednesday the government wants to function as a "unified economic center" with firm control over all branches of the economy.

Czechoslovakia has fared relatively well in comparison to Hungary and Poland, whose large foreign debts and stagnant economies have reduced living standards, but economic growth has slowed recently.

It has paid lip service to Gorbachev-style reforms, but has not made extensive changes. One of Adamec's first jobs will be to work out a program for submission to the next session of parliament.

No reason to bar gays from Army, lawyer says

By Bob Egelko
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The Army has no more justification in barring homosexuals from service than it did in locking up Japanese-Americans in World War II, a lawyer argued Wednesday before a federal appeals panel in a historic discrimination case.

"There was no evidence to support the Army's assertion that all Japanese-Americans were not loyal. There is no evidence to support the Army's assertion that all homosexuals cannot effectively serve the military," said James Lobsenz, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer representing a discharged gay soldier from Tacoma, Wash.

The Army's goal in excluding homosexuals, Lobsenz said, is "to cater to private bigotry."

But Justice Department attorney E. Roy Hawkens said the Army had the right to follow "society's moral judgments" against homosexuals.

"Congress has given the military broad authority to determine what is appropriate conduct," Hawkens told the court. He said the confined military environment "provides the opportunity for (homosexual) conduct, which is disruptive."

He contended a 1986 Supreme Court ruling upholding a Georgia anti-sodomy law had foreclosed broad constitutional protections for homosexuals, an argument Lobsenz disputed.

In a courtroom packed with spectators, including plaintiff Perry Watkins, an 11-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals heard more than an hour of arguments in reconsidering a decision by a smaller panel of the court this February.

In the earlier decision, the court ruled 2-1 that the Army's ban on homosexuals was invalid, and declared that homosexuals, as a historically persecuted group, were entitled to the same strict constitutional protections against discrimination given to racial and religious minorities.

It was the first federal appellate court to reach those conclusions. In its ruling, the panel said the Georgia sodomy case had only denied constitutional protection for homosexual acts, and had not ruled out protections based on sexual orientation.

The legal effect of that ruling was set aside when an 11-judge panel of the court agreed to hear the government's appeal, a procedure followed in only a small minority of cases. The panel, chosen at random from the 24-judge court, is fairly evenly divided between judges with liberal and conservative records.

President may ask for more Contra aid

By Jim Drinkard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan intends to call Congress back to Washington for a special session later this year if he judges that Nicaragua's Sandinista government is seeking to mop up the remnants of the anti-government Contra rebels, sources said Wednesday.

Reagan plans to announce his intent in a statement later this week, said the well-placed sources, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

If the president decides to do so, he would ask Congress for quick action to release $16.5 million in military aid for the Contras now stockpiled in Honduran warehouses.

The precise forum and timing for Reagan's statement have not been decided, the sources said. But they said it was intended to be a strong signal to the leftist Sandinistas that "Reagan ain't leaving town," as one source put it, and will be watching developments in Nicaragua.

Under a Pentagon money bill Reagan signed earlier this month, a procedure is established for expedited congressional consideration of a new request for military aid for the rebels.

The Contras have been without U.S. military support since February, when it was ended in deference to efforts to forge a long-term cease-fire between the two sides. The rebels now are receiving some $27 million in humanitarian aid under the Pentagon appropriations measure.

Under the law, Reagan could trigger an expedited vote on the military aid if he certifies to Congress that two of three conditions are met: that the Soviet Union continues to funnel unacceptable levels of military hardware to the Sandinistas; that the leftist Sandinista government is violating terms of a regional peace accord; and that they launch an unprovoked attack on the rebels.

Administration officials maintain that the first two of those conditions already exist. "The president will say if anything approaching the third (condition) occurs, I will call Congress back into session," said one source familiar with the White House planning.

Ailing Japanese emperor weakening, say reports

The Associated Press

TOKYO — Emperor Hirohito has grown weaker and his anemia and jaundice have worsened, Imperial Palace officials and news reports said Wednesday.

Kenji Maeda, a spokesman for the Imperial Household Agency, said the 87-year-old emperor showed no outward signs of internal bleeding during the day, but doctors gave him more blood in an attempt to reduce the anemia.

Officials said Hirohito's strength was declining because doctors were unable to supply enough nutrients through intravenous feeding.

The emperor, the world's longest-reigning living monarch, has not been able to eat anything except for two ice cubes and a few spoonfuls of soup since his condition worsened Sept. 19.

Although the emperor did not discharge any blood today, a Palace official said he could not rule out the possibility that internal bleeding, thought to be coming from the upper intestine, might be accumulating somewhere in his body.

The emperor's temperature was reported at 99.3 late today, compared to his normal reading of about 95.9.

After a five-day lull, Hirohito discharged a small amount of blood Tuesday afternoon, and doctors administered 0.84 pints in blood transfusions to combat anemia. The single transfusion was double the amount he has received in almost daily doses since falling ill.

Palace officials have refused to confirm or deny news reports that Hirohito has cancer in his upper digestive system, and they have urged the media to refrain from such speculation.

The emperor has no political power but serves as a symbol of the unity of Japan.

Computer pioneer unveils latest model

By Rich Cartiere
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Personal computer industry pioneer Steve Jobs unveiled his new Next computer workstation, calling it a "university on a desktop" during a glitzy product demonstration on Wednesday that rivaled a Hollywood premiere.

"This will serve not only as the latest state-of-the-art technological tool, but as a partner in thought," Jobs told 3,000 people gathered at San Francisco's posh Louise M. Davies Symphony Hall.

"It's performance is staggering," the 33-year-old co-founder of Apple Computer said as students, industry executives and potential software contributors wildly cheered.

Jobs said his long-awaited computer would be available by the second quarter of next year

Libraries seek funds through bond measure

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the seventh in a series on the November ballot propositions. Tomorrow: Proposition 86.

Propositions '88

Proposition 85:

Would provide $75 million for public libraries, with the money going for construction, expansion and renovation of local library buildings.

SACRAMENTO — Cramped and aging libraries from Humboldt County to San Diego are looking for relief from Proposition 85, a $75 million bond measure.

Faced with cutbacks in federal grants and philanthropic donations, communities are seeking the state-backed bonds to finance library construction and renovation.

"Never before has the Legislature proposed state funding for California's sadly decaying library system," Halbert Watson, president of the California Library Association, said in a recent statement.

"Recognition of the need has been long in coming."

One of nine bond measures placed on the November ballot by the Legislature and governor, Proposition 85 would authorize the state to sell $75 million in bonds for local libraries.

The money would provide matching grants, with local governments paying 35 percent of the cost of library construction, rehabilitation and expansion.

Communities could only use the grants for library construction and land. Using the money for books, materials, operating costs or administration would be prohibited.

The state librarian would allocate the grants on the basis of need.

The state would pay off the bonds from the general fund over a period of 20 years.

Critics raise concerns over the state's growing reliance on bonds. The record $3.3 billion November bond package comes just five months after voters' passage of $2.2 billion in bonds in June.

However, state economists project that even if voters approve all nine November bond measures, California will remain well below other states' averages on the amounts of their budgets spent on debt service.

Sen. Barry Keene, D-Vallejo, who sponsored legislation to put Proposition 85 on the Nov. 8 ballot, said the measure would cost each Californian 25 cents a year.

"California's library system is in a state of decay," Keene said recently in a prepared speech. "Many communities do not even have a local library. Others are overburdened because their growth has not kept pace with California's population explosion."

"In Palmdale, a library built in 1977 to serve a community of 15,000 must now serve a still-growing population of 50,000," he said. "Space is so limited at the Humboldt County library that for every volume added to its collection, one must be removed."

Proposition 85 is supported by state Democratic and Republican leaders, the California Taxpayers' Association, the California Chamber of Commerce and the California Parent Teachers Association, Keene said.

There is no organized opposition to the proposed bonds, said Peter Birdsall, campaign manager of the Californians for Community Libraries group backing Proposition 85.

Janet Brown, executive director of the Commission. That figure is slightly above those for the Wake Forest and Omaha debates because of time constraints and Los Angeles' higher transportation, housing and labor costs, Brown said.

The Commission received a $25,000 gift yesterday morning from the L.A. City Council to help offset debate costs.

Regarding preparations, Brown said confidently, "We're in good shape, and we're on schedule."

UCLA student debate team members were on hand at Pauley Pavilion yesterday to serve as stand-ins for the candidates and panelists during numerous sound and lighting checks.

Bruins to rally for Bush, Dukakis after square-off

By Eugene Ahn
and Robert Brunwin
Staff Writers

For some UCLA students, the next best thing to watching today's presidential debate will be seeing the candidates in person afterward.

So when the stage lights up in Pauley Pavilion for the last presidential debate of the 1988 campaign, UCLA political clubs supporting the Democratic and Republican tickets will leave campus to watch it.

If they want to see the candidates in person, it will be their only choice.

Bruin Republicans will be part of a throng of Republican supporters who will watch the debate from Loyola Marymount University. At a post-debate bash there, Vice President George Bush will speak to student supporters from UCLA, Loyola Marymount University, Pepperdine University and USC.

The Bruin Democrats will be among 2,000 supporters at the Beverly Hilton watching the debate on large-screen televisions and rallying for Democratic Presidential candidate Michael Dukakis, said Gita Amar, a Dukakis campaign press aide. Amar said Dukakis is scheduled to speak at a rally in the hotel after the debate.

The two post-debate rallies are the best chance for campaign supporters to see the candidates as tickets for tonight's debate are unavailable to the general public.

"The sad fact of life is that the debate is on this campus, but everyone will be watching it on TV," said senior Owen Jackman, UCLA campus coordinator for the Dukakis campaign.

But for the Bruin Democrats and Bruin Republicans, two campus clubs which have been ardent supporters of their candidates' respective campaigns, the opportunity to meet the candidates live is worth missing the chance to see them at Pauley Pavilion.

"Even if I could, I wouldn't," said junior John Callahan, chairman of Bruin Republicans. "(The debate) is much better on television."

Although Dukakis' reception is primarily for Democratic campaign supporters and guests, the Bush rally is open for students. According to Callahan, a limited number of tickets are available free at a Bruin Republican table on Bruin Walk.

DEBATE: Expert analysis

Iyengar is convinced that the most important issue in the debate itself is Dukakis' "ability to create the impression that he is superior to Bush and capable of serving as president." Iyengar said that "so far Dukakis hasn't been able to do that.

Iyengar, like Zaller, said, "The event itself has no impact. The media interpretation is what's important," Iyengar said. "Dukakis needs what happened in the Quayle-Bentsen debate — like Bentsen's Jack Kennedy remark to Quayle. He needs a rhetoric, a symbolic act that will be noticed and brought out by the media. (That act) needs to be favorable to himself and unfavorable to Bush."

Iyengar believes that issues which may help Dukakis achieve this goal include Bush's role as head of the drug commission and the worsening of the drug problem, the crime issue, and the Iran-Contra affair.

Dukakis may attempt to launch a defense of the furlough program he has initiated in Massachusetts by bringing up the existence of a federal furlough program from which prisoners have not returned, Iyengar said.

He added that the Iran-Contra affair "may be the best opportunity for Dukakis to score some points by pointing out that the vice president has yet to say something about his role in it."

History Professor Robert Dallek said he would advise Dukakis "to go after Bush more aggressively.

"Clearly it's particularly important for Dukakis to make a big splash in this debate," Dallek continued. "He's behind in all the polls."

Explaining that Bush has been consistently attempting to brand Dukakis a liberal, Dallek commented that Dukakis should "go after Bush for liberal-bashing.

"Main institutions by which society lives have been brought around by liberals," Dallek said. "Among them are social security, MediCare, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the Department of Education, civil rights and voting rights. These institutions are not radical — they are mainstream American institutions at this point.

"Dukakis might come across as more candid about traditional democratic ideals — using the government to further the well-being of the country. He might confront Bush that the 'L-word' is not evil," Dallek said.

However, Bush is running under ideal conditions, according to Iyengar. "According to formula, the incumbent party gets re-elected when there is peace and prosperity," Iyengar said. "Because economy is the most crucial issue in American politics, people throw people out of office only when the economy is a mess, there is high unemployment and high inflation.

"Dukakis hasn't been able to create the impression that the economy is in a mess. Economic and political circumstances make it difficult for (the Democrats) to unseat the incumbents . . . Bush (simply) needs to appear minimally informed and aware in this debate."

Cole, however, thinks that the debates help the Dukakis campaign. "Dukakis is less known than Bush. Putting him up there makes him Bush's equal," Cole said.

Students act as stand-ins at mock debate

By Lisa Luboff
Contributor

The candidates and reporters on the podium in Pauley Pavilion Wednesday were not the familiar faces of Michael Dukakis and George Bush. Eight UCLA Debate Team members acted as stand-ins for the presidential candidates and the press corps.

The technicians adjusted cameras, lights, and sound equipment while students Dave Hernand and Scott Stratman stood behind the podiums as Dukakis and Bush. Jon Dean, Robyn Carrico, Ann Marie Crudo and Michelle Marlin sat at the press desk facing them, while Dave Smith and Colin Starger were observing as press corp members and replacements.

The UCLA Forensics Department was approached by ABC news last week when the possibility of the debate's location was still being discussed.

Dean, a debate team member, read from a script intended for reporter Bernard Shaw, while other "reporters" asked the "candidates" questions. The real intention was for the adjustment of lighting, camera, and sound.

"We thought initially that this would be an 'in' to the debate," said Starger, while Dean described the opportunity of filling in as "excellent."

The students won't be allowed to actually attend the debate because of possible student heckling and the complicated decision of which students could attend the debate as reasons for student exclusion.

"In the past, respect has not been shown to the candidates that come to campus," said Marlin. She recalled the poor treatment of Republican Senate candidate Ed Zschau by UCLA spectators last year as an example.

Dean disagreed with Marlin, saying, "I think it is a shame that students who want to learn about the political process are shut out." He emphasized that students actively involved on campus should be chosen to attend.

UCLA Public Information Officer Darlene Skeels said yesterday that 65 UCLA students will be attending the debates. (Twenty-five of the 100 tickets allotted to UCLA went to students, and forty student ushers will be attending).

While waiting on the ground floor of Pauley Pavilion, the debate students discussed political and debate issues. The general consensus of the team members was that both candidates did not have very admirable debate skills.

"The candidates should answer the questions with specific answers, not vague ideas," said Smith, later adding that, "neither (candidate) is personal or persuasive."

"There is not enough interaction between the candidates," said Hernand, adding that "there should be a more direct clash on the questions." All of the "stand-ins" agreed that cross examination should be a part of the presidential debate.

The UCLA Debate Team ranked second nationally in 1987-88 in the Cross Examination Debate Association (CEDA), and won four national first place titles from 1980 to 1984.

Many of the students who acted as "stand-ins" expressed an interest in broadcasting or political professions.

Carrico summed up her experience in this role. "Being involved with this debate, you realize there is a bigger connection between politics and the media than you thought."

Experts

"came off as more knowledgeable" in the last debate, according to Cole. "But now he needs to come across as more passionate, warmer, a nicer president. Bush needs to be more confident, direct, professional and answer questions more."

The role of the media in the outcome of the debate is crucial, according to most of the experts.

Zaller set forth a theory that the American public is divided into two main segments: those who pay a great deal of attention to the news and those who pay little or almost none. Those who pay more attention have already made up their mind about who to vote for, Zaller postulates, and the presidential debate will not influence them.

Those who pay little or no attention to the news are probably undecided and are not going to vote at this point, Zaller said.

"What happens in a debate is that occasionally someone will commit a gaffe or say something stupid, and the media will start harping on it and make enough noise that it will finally become audible to the undecided. If that doesn't happen, the media will make nothing of (the debate)."

Zaller cited the 1976 Carter-Ford debate and Ford's remark that all was well in Eastern Europe as an example of the influence of the media. The people who watched the debate thought the outcome was fairly even and that remark went unnoticed until the media "made a big deal out of it" and influenced the outcome of the debate, Zaller said.

"To reach the undecided audience, the media would need to repeat something for several days," Zaller added. "For example, Gary Hart's affair with Donna Rice is the kind of event it would take to reach the people who haven't been paying attention. You couldn't help hearing about it no matter how uninformed you were."

"Public attention will be on media coverage, not on what is said," Iyengar commented.

Candidates

as well, saying he would use a "fastball, curve, slider — maybe a knuckler" during his 90 minutes on stage.

Workers in Los Angeles erected a debate-night set — wooden lecterns, red carpet and telegenic blue background — that was trucked in from Omaha, where it was used in last week's vice presidential debate. The debate begins at 9 p.m. EDT on the UCLA campus in Los Angeles.

Bush goes into the 90-minute encounter with a modest lead in the public opinion polls, although Dukakis appears to have cut into the Republican advantage since last week's vice presidential debate.

Bush said he believes he is in a stronger position politically than before the first residential debate on Sept. 25 and added that his goal for Thursday night is to have the voters understand "what my heartbeat is, what I really care about."

NASA readies spacecraft for trip to Venus

By Howard Benedict
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA officials hope that a disassembled spacecraft, built for California's Jet Propulsion Laboratory and sitting in crates at a hangar Wednesday, will be en route to Venus by April as America's first interplanetary explorer in 11 years.

The space agency showed off the scattered pieces of the Magellan spacecraft to reporters and photographers four days after the spacecraft's arrival by truck from Denver, where the Martin Marietta Corp. built the probe for JPL.

The laboratory is located in Pasadena, Calif., and runs the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's unmanned space exploration program.

If all goes well, the parts will be assembled and checked out over the next few months and then transported to the launch pad in March to be loaded aboard the space shuttle Atlantis, said Jo Ann Morgan, the Kennedy Space Center's director of payloads projects management.

The scheduled launch date is April 28.

NASA will have only 25 days, until May 23, to get Atlantis off the pad before Venus moves out of its favorable alignment with Earth. Otherwise the Magellan voyage will have to be delayed about two years, said Charles Brown, Magellan program manager for Martin Marietta.

Once the shuttle is in orbit, the crew will release Magellan from the cargo bay and a rocket will start it on the 466-day trip to Venus.

It will be the first planetary probe launched from a shuttle as well as the first U.S. planetary mission since two Pioneer spacecraft were dispatched in 1978 to study Venus' atmosphere.

Magellan is to settle into an elliptical orbit around Venus ranging from 155 miles to 1,180 miles above the surface. Each circuit of the planet will take 3.1 days. During the 40 minutes the craft is nearest the surface, an advanced radar will peer through the constant cloud layer and obtain images of the surface, which will be relayed to an Earth station.

During each orbit, the radar, supplied by Hughes Aircraft Co. of El Segundo, Calif., will map a swath of surface hundreds of miles wide. Brown said it would take 1,853 such swaths, recorded over 243 days, to chart the entire planet.

"The spacecraft will be conducting basic research about how Venus was formed," Brown told a news conference. "To find out, we need to know the topography of the planet.

While Venus is Earth's closest neighbor in the solar system, the two planets are vastly different. Venus has a surface temperature of about 900 degrees Fahrenheit, its atmosphere is almost entirely carbon dioxide, and its atmospheric pressure is 90 times that of Earth.

Brown said one goal of the mission is to try to learn why the two planets evolved so differently.

Senate, House overwhelmingly pass legislation to close bases

By Tim Ahern
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress overwhelmingly passed legislation Wednesday which authorizes the Pentagon to close unneeded military bases at a savings of up to $5 billion a year.

The Senate approved the bill 82-7 and the House followed shortly afterward with a 370-31 vote which sent the measure to President Reagan. He is expected to sign it.

The Defense Department estimates that between $2 billion and $5 billion a year can be saved if it is permitted to pare down the list of 3,800 U.S. military installations.

The bill sets up a complicated base-closing procedure which essentially cuts through the thicket of laws enacted by Congress in the past decade to thwart Pentagon efforts to shut down bases.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said, "We know we cannot afford excess bases that we don't need, (but) we all also understand the reality and the sensitivity of the communities in America that are so dependent, in some cases, on these bases, at least in the short run, and we know that reflects itself here in the Congress."

The bill endorses a Pentagon-appointed commission which has been meeting for months, trying to put together a list of bases to be closed. The current panel will be expanded to 12 members by the bill.

The panel will make its recommendations by Dec. 31 and Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci would have until Jan. 15 — five days before he leaves office — to either accept or reject the entire list. He could not

EEOC failed to fully investigate discrimination, study concludes

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of a House panel that oversees the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission says a new report shows the agency was "more concerned with reducing paperwork than with protecting claimants' civil rights."

The General Accounting Office released a report Tuesday that said the EEOC did not fully investigate up to 82 percent of job discrimination claims over a three-month period last year.

Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., who ordered the study as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, said "The EEOC's failure to fully investigate job discrimination claims is further evidence of the agency's attack on civil rights protections."

The GAO, an investigative arm of Congress, said 41 to 82 percent of the charges closed by six EEOC district offices during the period and 40 to 87 percent of charges closed by five state agencies were not fully investigated.

Soviets should file tax returns, report Moscow economists

By Mark J. Porubcansky
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Another Western influence may soon follow rock music and fast food into Soviet society: the ritual of filing annual financial returns and paying a progressive income tax.

A pair of economists said in articles published Wednesday that a complete reform of the Soviet tax system is necessary to expose those who have made fortunes in the multibillion dollar black market, and spread income more equitably.

"To search for some kind of scientific approach in our system of taxation is useless," Deputy Finance Minister Viktor Semenov told the weekly Moscow News.

Semenov and economist V. Yaroshenko, writing in the Communist Party daily newspaper Pravda, both said a yearly statement of income and expenditures was essential.

Yaroshenko added that the income tax should be made more progressive, as it is in many other countries, to be fairer to poor people.

Currently, Soviets pay a flat 10 percent of their income in tax if they make less than $320 a month, the average industrial wage. The rate insreases a few percentage points for higher incomes. Most taxes are deducted at the work place and workers don't need to file annual tax returns.

"Declarations of income and expenditures would serve as a means of strong economic and psychological action most of all against the system of organized crime," said Yaroshenko.

By filling out such forms, illegal millionaires would be making a "preliminary accusation" of themselves, he said.

Black marketeering and other organized crime saps the economy of more money every year than is paid in benefits to pensioners, invalids, students, families with many children and orphans, he said.

It is so well-organized that it constitutes a "government within the government," he said.

The current economic and tax structure hurts the poor, Yaroshenko said. He suggested the government impose more progressive income taxes, and that illegal millionaires be allowed to give their ill-gotten wealth to state-run charities anonymously before filing their financial statements.

Yaroshenko's article was the second published in Pravda in two days to address the effects of economic reforms on the Soviet poor. In an article published Tuesday, a farm economist said increasing food prices would be an unacceptable way to eliminate the $105 billion the government pays every year in subsidies. Instead, Kim. N. Khmelkov said the Soviet Union must make farming much more efficient.

In yet another article printed Wednesday, Moscow News said that in the first half of the year, $130,000 was confiscated in the Soviet capital from people illegally trading rubles for hard currencies. But it said police are nowhere near able to control the problem.

change the list.

If Carlucci approves the list, Congress would have until mid-April to overturn the proposal, but it could only do that by approving a resolution which could then be vetoed by the incoming president.

No base closures would begin before 1990.

Nunn and Sen. John Warner, R-Va., ranking Republican on the Armed Services panel, said they have talked with commission members and no list of bases to be closed has yet been prepared.

But if some of Virginia's numerous bases are on the Warner said, "I'm willing to take the heat, if it becomes a matter of necessity, in my own state in order to cut waste from the national defense."

"If we're going to do something about balancing the budget, the way to do it is to eliminate unnecessary spending and bases," said Sen. William Roth, R-Del.

Soviets

ed near hotels and tourist sites in large cities by hordes of people offering to exchange money. Such exchanges are illegal and give the Soviets access to goods they cannot buy in the official economy.

Yaroshenko blamed the pervasiveness of organized crime on the centralized Soviet economy's inability to produce large quantities of high-quality consumer goods.

"Instead of the usual 'sold' and 'bought,' we started to say, 'threw out,' and 'managed to get,'" Yaroshenko said. "That money is hard to earn has always been normal and natural — but that it is hard to spend, this is an alarming symptom."

Semenov said the tax system will be reformed in the early 1990s, when economists also are aiming to implement a comprehensive system of price reform.

The government must reduce indirect taxes that are worked into the retail prices of many goods and turn to direct taxes that now make up only 7.5 percent of the national budget, he said.

Semenov said some of the heaviest indirect taxes historically have been imposed on light industry and food processing, two areas of the economy Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev is urgently trying to reform to provide a better life for Soviet citizens.

Taxes significantly raise the retail price of refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, TV sets and tape recorders, he said.

The wholesale price of a Volga, the largest standard passenger car produced in the country, is $5,460. After indirect taxes are added, however, the final retail price is more than $25,600.

blood drive.

Chen said that there was a misconception that Homecoming and Spring Sing, both SAA programs, are only for greeks.

The Senior Class Cabinet is in its third year of raising money from graduating seniors to give a lasting gift to the campus. The class of '87s gift of a permanent speakers' podium in Meyerhoff Park has been held up from red tape, but they hope to see work on it soon. The class of '88s gift of campus directories in "in the works," said Chen.

"Involvement on any level is encouraged in the Student Alumni Association," said Chen. Applications for executive committees of SAA's eight programs are due tomorrow, Oct. 14, on the second floor of the James West Center.

For those whose schedules do not permit the commitment on the executive committees, membership in SAA can mean working on one or all programs. While of course all programs are open to all students and alumni for participation.

SAA will mail rosters as they "want to keep in touch with the membership to allow those to help when they are available," said Chen.

Don't miss Parents' Day at UCLA this year, scheduled for March 3. Other SAA programs include Dinners for Twelve Strangers, Run Like a Bruin with proceeds going to UniCamp, and Bruin Survival Kits to get students through finals week each quarter.

at a price around $6,500, about twice earlier estimates.

California Superintendent of Schools Bill Honig, who attended part of the demonstration, predicted the Next would "free students and teachers from textbooks, giving them the freedom to marvel in worlds never before possible in the classroom."

Each one is built in 20 minutes at a factory in Fremont, some by robots with vision sensors that can place up to 150 parts per minutes, Jobs said.

The Next comes in a black magnesium case, with a separate central processing unit, a tilt-up, height-adjustable, 17-inch screen; a laserprinter that is half the size of the smallest one now available on the market with 80 percent more resolution; array-processing for multiple task performance; and a 265-megabyte, erasable optical disc drive, which is about 50 times the storage of anything comparable on the market.

thousands of dollars in the long run," he said.

Ambrose later called the decision "disheartening," and said it "may mean we won't attend because we don't have a hotel room. However, if we do, I intend to take up Mike Spence's offer to transport us back and forth.

"We are one of the top 10 universities in the nation, but you would never know this from our representation at this conference," Ambrose said.

Campus Events was also allotted money for advertising costs not related to the event.

Braun expressed even stronger emotions about the issue. "The administration has promised to keep us abreast of all the developments and has not. Frankly at this moment I don't feel real trusting — we keep being told one thing by one member of the administration and another thing by another member."

"(The parents) are told one thing publicly, and then we read something entirely different in the papers, which leads me to think that the papers know more than we do, and that makes me just furious," she said.

Dean of the Graduate School of Education, Lewis C. Solmon, denied the allegation that the parents have not been informed about the progress of the merger.

Solmon said he called a parents meeting on Sept. 22 to inform them of developments in the talks. As for further interaction with parents, he said, "Parents will be informed, but not involved."

Schwartz said that "consultation with parents would not serve any useful purpose.

"We are not concealing anything from them," he continued. "We are aware that parents are as concerned about the education of their children as we are. Our concerns obviously reflect their concerns and others."

Solmon said that GSE is currently in the process of forming a committee consisting of UES and GSE administration and faculty. The committee will study conditions of the possible merger as well as issues such as preserving the autonomy of UES. Parents have not been included in the committee "because these are academic issues," according to Solmon.

UES parent Gina Brandt was angry about the position taken by the administration.

"The administration's argument that the decision is an administrative and educational decision, not a parental one, makes me just livid. It's a technique to disenfranchise the parents' viewpoint. We are taxpayers, and as such we have partial ownership in what UCLA does," she said.

Solmon added that there are certain things — such as research programs and administrative decisions — which do not require parental involvement.

Braun, however, expressed resentment at not having been included in the committee.

"We feel very excluded," she said. "We must be involved in the exploratory talks . . . There is no group of parents more deeply committed.

"We are thriving," Braun continued. "Why on earth are we looking for something better when it's right here? It seems disruptive to the functioning of the school.'

In fact, Braun is organizing a committee composed of concerned activists, parents and educators. "Its purpose is to articulate our concerns and involve us in the move," she said.

The administration, however, maintains that talks with SMMUSD are still tentative and preliminary and that no actions harmful to UES' current status will be taken. "If (the parents) want to worry about eventualities that may or may not occur, well, it's a free country," said Solmon.

Harmon

but I thought the purpose was to get an education."

"People assumed that with football at UCLA it was party after party where you have your choice of redhead, brunette or blonde . . . I didn't know about those, if they existed."

"One thing I learned here as an athlete was how to compete and how to enjoy it."

When someone questioned Harmon about the roles he has chosen for himself, the character of the sociopathic Ted Bundy in particular, he said, "I'm an ex-jock, so I don't understand the concept of playing it safe . . . I don't think that I've played a role yet that feels like putting on an old pair of boots . . . "

When asked if playing the Ted Bundy character had affected him, Harmon said "no," but he added that while he was making the film, his friends and four dogs avoided him.

After a minute, he conceded that maybe it had affected him a bit. "Like when you're in the supermarket, getting groceries, and you find yourself stalking somebody."

Questions asked were as varied as: "When you were in Summer School and the dog licked your finger, did they cut while you wiped it?" (Answer: "I've kissed some actresses I'd rather not have kissed . . . ") to where Harmon does his shopping and would he like to go out to lunch sometime.

When asked about playing the character of doctor Bobby Cauldwell from St. Elsewhere, Harmon commented, "People would stop and ask me for my medical opinion." Harmon said that after an episode involving a somewhat risque-for-television breast surgery, he was asked "some of the most bizarre questions about breasts."

"One woman pulled me behind a storefront window and exposed herself, asking, 'what do you think?' "

Harmon stressed the importance of staying true to the acting profession and challenging oneself instead of wondering "if a hair's out-of-place," as some actors do.

At a time when a lot of actors were asking for new dressing rooms, Harmon asked the writers of St. Elsewhere to give his character some challenges. When they told him that it might end up in a dead end, he said "fine."

They told him they were going to give his character AIDS. "That was just about the time I got the Coors account, and Coors is not the most liberal company . . . I didn't have a job waiting and everyone was telling me I was out of my mind. "But if I wanted security," he said, "I would still be selling shoes for Adidas."

As for his decision to be an actor, Harmon said, "I wanted to be able to say 'that's what I do for a living.' "

"I never thought about doing this as a lark. I want to act for the next 60 years," he said. "It's not like fast food, it's not like being on every cover of every magazine right now."

"I'm just getting started. If they ask me back in 30 years, I'll have a lot to say."

cent or $30,000 a year.

Terry Mulready, vice president of corporate communications for Pacific Bell, a co-sponsor of the conference, outlined some of the issues faced by working women.

"While it is true that women hold 40 percent of the middle management positions in America, only two percent of the senior management positions in America's largest corporations are held by women," she said.

She also said women with children under six are the fastest growing group in the American labor force.

"Child care is an issue. . . and in our society, child care is a woman's issue," she said. "Fortune Magazine recently said that in spite of 20 years of liberation, we as a society tend to look to women for the primary responsibility for rearing children."

The all-day conference featured 35 workshops on such items as business financing, contract negotiating and international trade, which Deukmejian encouraged women to join.

ing confrontations.

But the defense minister said the army had succeeded in stopping big protests and in recent days there had been a upsurge in the use of bullets, bombs and grenades.

The army did not identify the group behind the latest grenade attacks, but Arab journalists in the Gaza Strip said rumors circulated that the attacks were the work of Islamic militants.

Palestinian sources said Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization was not involved, and prominent Palestinians said they were not aware of any change in PLO policy.

"I don't think a few such cases signals any change in policy. But whoever is behind such acts is definitely not on the same track as the PLO," said Jonathan Kuttab, a Palestinian human rights activist.

PLO leaders have said Palestinian protesters had access to weapons but had been instructed not to use them in confrontations with Israelis.

Rabin said he believed the use of bullets by Palestinians may be an effort to prod PLO leaders into taking a stand politically on negotiations with Israel.

Since the beginning of the month, 15 Palesitinans have been killed and scores wounded, raising the overall death toll to 295 since the uprising began Dec. 8.

Ten suspected Arab collabators with Israeli authorities have been killed since last December, including three who were stabbed to death in recent weeks in Nablus, about 30 miles north of Jerusalem.

Soldiers blew up four houses in the old city of Nablus, a low-income neighborhood with narrow winding streets. Five other houses were sealed.

Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, military commander of the West Bank, said the houses belonged to Palestinian members of a group responsible for killing the Arabs who cooperated with Israel.

The United States has asked Israel to stop the policy of blowing up houses because it is done without court hearings.

to issue the statement.

The Aquino government says Marcos and his associates stole up to $10 billion before his administration was toppled in the 1986 uprising that swept Aquino to power.

But it has filed no criminal charges against Marcos for fear he would demand his right to return from exile in Hawaii for the trial. Philippine law bars criminal trials in absentia.

Filipino officials have filed 39 civil suits against Marcos to recover $96.7 billion in damages.

Last Monday, the anti-graft court rejected an appeal by Marcos to return when a former Cabinet minister gives a deposition about alleged kickbacks during the previous administration.

Caparas said efforts by Marcos to return were "either an excuse to get out of America or a part of his campaign to destabilize the present government."

On Tuesday, the Los Angeles Times reported that Sofaer proposed a plea bargain to avoid indicting and prosecuting a former head of state.

The newspaper said U.S. officials feared Marcos would seek to embarrass American and Filipino authorities by disclosing improper or illegal conduct if he were indicted.

The plea bargain proposal reportedly involves an investigation of Marcos by U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani in Manhattan into alleged illegal money transfers and other activities.

Earlier today, Caparas told reporters that Philippine authorities were not officially notified of any proposed plea bargain. He said that if Marcos accepted a U.S. deal, the former president would still face prosecution here.

"The plea bargaining is in the States, not here," Caparas said. "We have nothing to do with it. . . . The case there is different and will not reduce his culpability here."

Corrine Seeds, UES' first principal and namesake of the school, is responsible for the its strong focus on experiential education, according to Hyman.

He explained experiential education as "children learning from the real world, from real experiences." UES continues to function along the guidelines established by Seeds.

The experiences offered to UES students come from an unusual curriculum which includes Discursive and Visual Arts.

Hyman said that UES is devoting major effort toward areas such as childcare and its integration into the school community, health and well-being (encompassing both physical and mental health) and instructional technology.

Instructional technology will include the implementation of 120 computer stations in the school as part of the students' overall education. Computers will enable students to learn word processing, graphic design, data base development and programming skills.

Violent crime: a spectator sport?

Glenn Adams

It was definitely an unlawful act. In fact, ultimately someone's life would be threatened.

Contrary to what one might expect, the police weren't instigating the violence, and they weren't stopping it either . . . or even trying to.

This certainly wasn't the police department I've grown familiar with, who have a tendency to chew you out for looking at them the wrong way. No, here was a legitimate crisis, and they were doing nothing.

But sometimes old habits are hard to break, even those of only three hours standing. And after watching a burglary for that duration, apparently the cops had gotten all comfortable or something.

Or perhaps it just didn't occur to them, as the owner pulled into the driveway, they could've tipped her that someone was in her house.

Sometimes people have a tendency to miss the obvious, that way — especially when they're just "doing their job."

At any rate, shortly thereafter, a knife was being held at the woman's throat.

Luckily, she lived to say, "I could've been killed."

The suspects of the LAPD's Special Investigations Section don't always fare so well.

When the SIS finally does spring into action, they apparently figure that they have a lot of lost time to make up for.

At any rate, the criminals, sometimes unarmed, are often shot.

The rationale behind the SIS's non-intervention is, purportedly, to allow the crime to reach its culmination, in the interest of a better conviction. Apparently, however, even the unit's members don't buy this, if the number of SIS shootings is any indication.

In other words, you may have to wait for it, but I guess "justice" eventually prevails.

In the meantime, however, the suspects' innocent victims are sometimes pistol-whipped, thrown to the floor and otherwise brutalized, while the SIS shows its indignation by capturing the whole thing on film.

As I read about the SIS in the L.A. Times, thorough as the story might've been, I still had a few unanswered questions.

For instance, what would a behind-the-scenes look at the training program reveal — a bunch of potential SIS officers watching Friday the 13th and then opening fire on the closing credits?

Or how about the issuing of equipment? I can almost see it — a guy behind a table, in front of a line, handing out items and then checking them off.

"Gun. Barretta. Nine millimeter. Semi-automatic.

"Camera. Nikon. Single-lens reflex. Thirty-five millimeter. Automatic aperture setting.

"Easy chair. La-Z Boy. Leather seats. Reclining."

Police Chief Daryl F. Gates had a different reaction to the Times article than I did. Still, I guess I had to give him some credit. For what it's worth, when responding to the charge that civilians were being brutalized, he didn't claim the victims had all, by some bizarre coincidence, caught the police during a coffee break. He didn't say that.

What he did do was, point blank, defend the unit and its members for their "bravery." And he used the article as a springboard to attack the Times' "bias."

In other words, in the event that someone is killed while the SIS focuses their cameras, I guess the chief wants you to look past the unnecessary loss of life, and dwell instead on the conviction that the D.A. will then be able to turn in.

Old Daryl also lamented the fact that people now know about the SIS, a unit that the LAPD had kept pretty quiet about until a couple of weeks ago.

Such silence stands to reason, really. After all, when things are kept a secret, sometimes it's because there's something to hide.

When news got out of a gang-rape in a bar a few years back, much of the nation, understandably, was horror-struck — both by the crime itself, and by the disturbing realization that none of the onlookers had bothered to do anything about it.

It made all the papers, so I'm sure the LAPD heard of that incident, too. But somehow it isn't comforting when you have to wonder if the SIS thought of the onlookers as a potential pool of recruits.

Violent crime statistics are depressing enough as it is. But I think it would be even more depressing if it were deemed necessary to start taking attendance.

But, if that's the way it is, then SIS officers could be just the guys to add up the tally.

Just so long as they remember to count themselves.

In a later editorial, the Times suggested dismantling the SIS entirely.

I showed the article to a friend, and she said, "God, wouldn't it be great if they did it, and then transferred the officers to parking enforcement?"

She had a point. After all, if you're going to be indifferent about something, a car that's a foot into the red zone seems like a good enough place to start.

"We could use cops like that in parking enforcement," she said. "And I have the tickets to prove it." ■

Debate: why does it have to be a television event?

By Douglas Smith

Where are the public tickets for this week's debate at UCLA? This is a public university funded by money from the public of the state. Without the public there would be no Pauley Pavilion. There would be no UCLA, no need for a presidential debate between anyone. A great learning opportunity has been pushed into the face of all UCLA students and snatched away like a sweet piece of chocolate. Very seldom do we have so close to our lives a chance to participate in the democracy of our country, and here it is, being denied.

Over the summer, Campus Events, the undergraduate student programming body, worked to bring this debate to UCLA in fulfillment of a campaign pledge. Consistently the staff was snubbed by the two political parties as well as the League of Women Voters. Now, with only days until the debate the administration has stepped to the fore by providing Pauley Pavilion and excluding all student involvement in the process. Again students are denied the opportunity of advancing their practical education by an administration more concerned with propping UCLA's empty image of academic importance for the remainder of the country. If the organizers do not possess the dignity to work in conjunction with students then they should not deny us the opportunity to participate as audience members.

Pauley Pavilion contains 12,543 permanent seats that will not be used for the debate audience. Instead only 1,000 folding chairs are to be placed on the floor for spectators while media members scamper around the remainder of the gymnasium. We are told by Janet Brown of the commission on presidential debates that the reason for public exclusion is that "this is a television event, not an audience event."

Is this woman arguing that if every house in the United States suffered a power surge and the televisions exploded during the debate the loss would be greatest in the realm of televisions and not the loss of the audience? We all place enough faith in our control over electricity to allow the above question to wash past our minds as an absurd idea. However, as we examine all the information provided in the past days, the realities of the situation become more apparent.

Janet Brown continued to say that those invited to the debates are generally people who have supplied funds and provided the debate site. Are we to believe that the chancellor and other administrative officers are not included on the list of contributors that will fill those 1,000 folding chairs? He and the administrative staff are merely executors of the will of the public. Where are the tickets for that body?

To further quote Janet Brown, we learn that "audience noise can make things very difficult for the production crews." Where was this wisdom over the summer when these same production crews managed to present television views with coherent coverage of the two political conventions while crowds were yelling and cheering? That was noise; I heard it. Do the organizers believe that UCLA students will be so happy to return to Pauley Pavilion for a contest of any nature that the potential crowd will break into a spontaneous pep rally? Another absurd notion, but someone believes it — maybe even Janet Brown.

She did offer at least a teaser of a consolation by saying that at the previous presidential debate students were provided with special viewing rooms where they were to watch the debate for free. Thanks, Janet, but in a city where we can afford televisions we would prefer to see the event live. If you won't let us inside, we will be outside protesting.

Smith is a junior majoring in world arts and cultures.

UCLA students are being forgotten

Editor:

What's the matter here? The front page of the Oct. 10 Daily Bruin proclaims "Presidential Debate to be held at UCLA." Vice President George Bush and Massachusetts Governor Michael S. Dukakis have agreed upon using UCLA to wage their second and final debate. But, why UCLA? It's probably because UCLA typically is a center for political activity and its students are known for their diverse political backgrounds. But we all have one thing in common; the desire to be politically aware. I'm aware that UCLA students are being manipulated. The Commission on Presidential Debates is renting out Pauley Pavilion and using the UCLA name for notoriety. UCLA will benefit through untold publicity. But the students have been forgotten. We are the ones who make UCLA what it is today. We are the pioneers of higher education, yet we are being restricted from viewing the debate first-hand. Why can't some of the seats in Pauley Pavilion be allocated to the students and distributed on a lottery basis? It's our hard work and dedication that made UCLA a choice for the debates, and we deserve recognition.

The differing accounts of John Lennon's life

You may say I'm a dreamer,
But I'm not the only one . . .
— John Lennon,
from "Imagine"

By Steven Sherwood

So it seems that John Lennon has become the hottest topic since the revelation that Dan Quayle is technically brain-dead. Lennon's on the cover of "Rolling Stone." He's on "60 Minutes." He's got a new album out. He's in Bookstores Everywhere. Hey, he's even Coming to a Movie Theater Near You!

All that . . . and he's dead. Whatta guy!

This resurgence in the commercial packaging of Lennon has been stimulated by the debate over Albert Goldman's scathing biography of the dead Beatle. Goldman portrays Lennon as your basic drugged-out zombie in the manipulative clutches of a scheming Yoko Ono. Regardless of the accuracy of this portrait, the intensity of the debate about Lennon is undeniable. It's Making Money, and anything that Makes Money in America is undeniable.

The debate pits Yoko and Lennon's closest friends who are upholding the image of the Good John (as pictured in the new movie/album "Imagine") versus Goldman and others who portray a Bad John.

Among much of the public there seems to be some confusion as to why there's a debate at all. As I heard someone say in the bookstore the other day: "Look, why don't they just let the man alone?"

But the debate is not about John Lennon, the Man. John Lennon the Man is, as they say, History. He's gone on to the one place where even the IRS can't get him: You know, where it's Strawberry Fields Forever. Nope, we aren't dealing with John the Man here.

What we're dealing with here is John Lennon, the Symbol. And the reason that it's so important is because the debate is basically about Us. You and me. Us as individuals and as a society.

In a Nearly Post-Reagan, Pre-Star Wars, Neoconservative, Laptop Kinda World, John Lennon represents all the Groovy, Paisley, Psychedelic and Radical excitement of the '60s and early '70s. You know: Mojo clackers, semolina pilchard, Instant Karma and all that long-haired sorta stuff. He sang songs about Love. Peace. Racial Harmony.

But he's also the Spirit of Social Revolutions Past. There were songs about the Need to Change the System. To Change

The benefits of pesticide use are greater than the dangers

By Jeff Patterson

In recent weeks controversy has erupted over the use of pesticides upon American agricultural products. In particular this controversy has been aimed at the growers of California grapes. Cesar Chavez, the United Farm Workers and the Minority Association of Planners and Architects have all held fasts and urged a boycott of the grape industry.

What has been particularly appalling are the claims of these self-styled servants of the public. A noteworthy statement was made by Bill Ituarte of the United Farm Workers in which he states that the use of pesticides is not just an environmental issue but an issue of justice and rights. By this he meant that he was substituting his own personal valuations of right and wrong for the rest of humanity.

How Ituarte arrived at his conclusions we will never know. By all standards pesticides have made everybody better off. In the United States pesticides assure for us an unparalleled abundance of crops. They protect our food products from harmful insects and diseases which ravage the economies and lives of the people of the Third World. No doubt some of these chemicals can be harmful when ingested in large quantities. Yet there are many products which can be harmful or fatal in large quantities, such as alcohol, drugs and common medications. We continue to use these items because we believe their benefits to outweigh the ill consequences. When people assert that the use of pesticides is wrong, they can only be understood to mean that the prevention of starvation is wrong.

Another erroneous claim made by these people is that the farm workers are treated inhumanely by the agricultural industry. It is easily accepted that the conditions and the salaries these people work under are not as pleasant as those which the average American worker enjoys. Yet citizens from Third World countries continue to voluntarily come to the United States and work under the conditions which exist in the agricultural industry.

Additionally, the question of "whether or not these chemicals cause cancer" is an irrelevant one. Many people work in industries which are particularly hazardous to their health. Doctors and nurses run the risk of contracting diseases from their patients, football players face injuries, and soldiers face the possibility of war. These people continue to work because they feel adequately compensated for the risk.

There is much reason to believe the allegations made by the United Farm Workers to be fraudulent. Two of the five chemicals are not used, and the others are used upon strawberries and lettuce as well as grapes.

Further, the use of pesticides should be applauded, not condemned. Pesticides have greatly reduced the cost of agricultural products and provided many jobs by making the use of once marginally productive land profitable.

The United Farm Workers, by advocating a ban upon these chemicals, has either used faulty reasoning or has hidden motives for its protest. The ban which the U.F.W. advocates is aimed directly at the consumer in the form of higher food prices. Pesticides have provided America with more food than could be imagined to exist by the people of the underdeveloped nations. Can the U.F.W. really wish us to envy these people?

Patterson is a sophomore majoring in economics/system science.

LENNON: What his life symbolizes for us in the '80's the World. About dealing with the Darker Side of ourselves. About Coming Together, individually and collectively. Etcetera.

John Lennon, then, is a symbol of the reflective, blue-jeaned social conscience of the late '60s here in the wonderfully pragmatic, patriotic and pin-striped '80s.

To the degree that we define Lennon as Good John, we identify with the message he expressed in his music. Lennon's message begs us to wonder whether a country full of people stupidly watching each other wave flags and wallets, smacking its collective lips at the thought of "tax cuts" while fellow citizens go homeless without food or health care, can really be the Promised Land. Have we really come so far for this?, Lennon might ask.

On the other hand, to the extent that Lennon becomes labeled as a sort of emasculated Wimpoid, as Goldman paints him, a burned out victim of excess, he symbolizes the errors of the '60s: the unrest, the violence, the decline. The whole message behind Bad John is that the lifestyles of the '60s were decadent, and that the whole period is now happily behind us.

The debate over Lennon is an argument about which direction we should take as a society. If Goldman's Bad Lennon predominates, we have sort of a "Reaganism in Rock": Lennon was a loser so go buy Paul McCartney records and Be Happy. If the symbol of Good Lennon triumphs, then his music serves as inspiration to continue the revolution begun in the '60s: to build a better, fairer society.

I suppose my own preference for the image of Good John is clear. On the other hand, Reagan's America may well get what it deserves: lots of Paul McCartney records.

Instant Karma, indeed.

Sherwood is a graduate student of sociology.

All the students get out of this is trampled grass

By Don Catanzaro

I was astonished to learn that no students, or the general public for that matter, would be allowed to attend the presidential debate that will be held at UCLA's Pauley Pavilion. Where is the logic in that? Why hold this event at this University if students can't attend? Pauley Pavilion holds 12,543 people and yet only a little over 1,000 will be attending. What could be the reason? It seems to me that there could only be a few possible explanations for this strange decision: 1) The candidates are afraid to defend their policies to the general public (it was hard enough to get them to defend themselves against their opponent) 2) they are unconcerned with whether the public listens to them or not 3) it would disturb the choreographed forum of the debate, or 4) it would be too much of an inconvenience to the campaigns and the media to have a large live audience.

However, the only true inconvenience that is going to be borne is by the students, students which aren't allowed to attend. For the next week, according to the Bruin, "parking must be accounted for." I hope they count well because it is hard enough for UCLA students to park. All of this week the intramural field has been at least partly used by various media and campaign officials. This same field was closed until October 3 for reseeding. It hardly seems sensible to have this "new" field subjected to cars, trucks, and semis driving across it, as well as having temporary buildings constructed on it. For the next week, students will have to deal with the relatively minor problem of workers setting up the event. These are all somewhat inconsequential and would not be minded by most students if they had an option of attending the debate; in fact, many students would stand in line for tickets.

As it stands now, the students do not benefit at all by having the presidential debate held on this campus, except the luxury of having our field trampled. The parties involved will use our facilities (I hope the administration had enough sense to at least charge them enough to cover the cost of reseeding the field, which by the way will probably take a few months to start anyway) and leave, making no lasting impression on the voting community. The whole plan of having a national debate without the presence of a true audience is ludicrous (I use the word "true" because the audience will be fundraisers and other insiders). I suggest that the administration raffle off, or choose by lottery, 100 student tickets to the debate. Otherwise, the whole affair is obviously unfair to the public and to the students of this university, and this sort of denial should not be accepted. I urge all of the people who would like to attend this debate to voice their objections when the candidates appear at UCLA to participate in the discussion. It may not enable you to gain entrance, but it will bring to light the injustice of the whole situation.

Catanzaro is a sophomore majoring in geography.

A GOLD-DIGGER's LAST STRAW

Don't bust out crying, but this year's most talked about union has come to an end. Actress Robin Givens, 24, filed for divorce from her heavyweight champ husband Mike Tyson, 22, on the grounds of "irreconcilable differences." Givens is said to have filed for divorce in Los Angeles, instead of filing in New Jersey where she and Tyson reside, because California law allows for an immediate access to a split of assets. Givens enlisted the help of celeb divorce lawyer Marvin Mitchelson.

STICKY SITUATION

The Icelandic band The Sugarcubes, whose debut album Life's Too Good have been bowling progressive music fans over, have more than their share of inner band turmoil. Seems that the group's lead singer Bjork Gudmundsdottir recently divorced bandmate Thor (with whom she has a two year-old son), who has taken up with another member of the group during their recent U.S. tour.

ADDITIONS TO THE FALL TV LINEUP

Cliff Huxtable feels his age this TV season. The character played by Bill Cosby on NBC's The Cosby Show will become a grandfather when his TV daughter Sondra (Sabrina Labeauf)and her husband Elvin join the ranks of the expectant parents. Lisa Bonet, who plays another Cosby kid, will have to hide behind grocery bags on the set to conceal her offscreen pregnancy. Mel Harris' character of Hope on the ABC program thirtysomething will expect baby number two this fall.

SPY'S TRIPLE A

The October issue of Spy Magazine, a quirky periodical based in New York, contains their "annual census of the 100 most annoying, alarming and appalling people, places and things." The Elvis Lives movement ranked in at #35 with an "inherent loathesomeness factor" of 7, but with the mitigating factor of "better him than Mengele." Cher made the list (#63) because, among other reasons, her perfume Uninhibited sells for a chincy $175 per ounce. Number one on the list goes to The Rev. Al Sharpton , champion of the Tawana Brawley rape case, who was punched out on The Morton Downey Show this summer. Al's misdeeds include his $50 plus spent on "hairdo maintenance." One question remains. Is he a person, place or thing?

EVERYBODY'S DOING IT

In the spirit on the what's in and what's out lists, People and now US have taken to asking their readers the probing question of who are the sexiest entertainers? In this week's issue of US, we are told what celebrities make America's heart pound. For the oldsters — Knots' Landing vixen Donna Mills (No. 7 out of ten sexy women celebrities) and Tom Selleck (No. 6 on the mens' list). Jaclyn Smith and Tom Cruise, staple names on lists of this kind, appear as No. 3 and No. 2, respectively. And, of course, the moment we've all been biting our nails over — who are the celebrities that make our palms sweat the most? Professional bohunk Patrick Swayze and Cher were voted number one cuties.

HERE AND THERE

Lisa Marie Presley, daughter o' the King, was married last week at the ripe old age of 20 . . . Comedienne Whoopi Goldberg filed for divorce from her husband of two years and became engaged to another all in the same week . . . Actor Steve Three Men and a Baby Guttenberg wed a 23 year-old model . . . Dirty Dancing's Jennifer Grey isn't pining away after her breakup (a car crash puts a damper on a relationship) with actor Matthew Broderick. She's engaged to Johnny Depp of 21 Jump Street.

IT'S OKAY NOT TO DRINK

This week's quotable quote — the next time you're about to drink a beer while watching MTV, remember, "Alcohol is the devil's urine," says Charlie Sheen. And he should know.

Jodi Foster is Sarah Tobias in 'The Accused'

Foster stays tough in 'Accused,' 'most challenging' role of career

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

You couldn't have planned for a more wholesome start for an aspiring child actress. At the age of three, this young Los Angeles actress' unofficial beginnings were marked by being the original "Coppertone Girl" and then landing a role on an episode of Last in a series of three interviews with the women behind The Accused.

Mayberry, R.F.D.. Becoming a series regular on The Courtship of Eddie's Father and My Three Sons followed, as well as appearances in numerous Disney television productions. But the more auspicious beginnings of Jodi Foster's career came in 1976 with a role that cut against the grain of anything she had done before: playing a teenage prostitute.

At fourteen, Foster's portrayal of a teenage prostitute in Martin Scorsese's Taxi Driver was honored with an Oscar nomination, as well as awards from critics at home and abroad. Her other films have included Bugsy Malone, Foxes, The Hotel New Hampshire, Siesta and this summer's Stealing Home with Mark Harmon. Now twenty-eight years old, Foster admits that her most recent film The Accused (opens tomorrow) presented her with the role of a lifetime.

Casually dressed, wearing tortoise shell glasses and sipping capuccino, Foster talked about her varied career and of her latest performance in The Accused.

"This character is probably the most challenging, the most emotionally layered I've ever done," she said of her depiction of Sarah Tobias, a young woman who is violently gang-raped on top of a pinball machine as a crowd of cheering and clapping men looked on. In seeking justice for the crime, Tobias' case is given to Assistant District Attorney Katheryn Murphy (Kelly McGillis). Together, the two women bring to trial the people who were as dangerous as the men who committed the crime — the witnesses who let it happen.

Those who follow films closely might not be surprised with Foster's role as a tough, strong, willful woman. She's been playing those types of roles ever since Taxi Driver. But producers who would typecast Jodi Foster should be wary. "If it's something that I've done before then I just won't do the movie, and it doesn't matter if I don't work for two years." Foster does admit that she doesn't know what her "type" is. "I mean I always play strong characters, even dumb blondes. They're always strong dumb blondes.

"I love the character (of Sarah Tobias)," Foster said. "What I especially liked about this movie is that Sarah isn't just the girl who was raped, she's a human being. In fact, I think the crime with movies that do talk about rape, is that

Mozart opera receives first-rate production

■ OPERA: Cosi fan tutte. Music by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. Libretto by Lorenzo da Ponte. Sung in Italian, with Supertitle translations. Presented by the Los Angeles Music Center Opera. Directed by Sir Peter Hall. Christof Perick conducting the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra and the Los Angeles Master Chorale. Iona Brown and John Currie, Music Directors. October 8, 11, 14, & 16 at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion. Call (213) 972-7211 for information about ticket availability and student discounts.

Los Angeles Music Center Opera's 1988-89 season has begun promisingly with stellar productions of The Tales of Hoffmann, Katya Kabanova, and Cosi fan tutte scheduled for the month of October.

Mozart's late comic masterpiece Cosi fan tutte, seen by this reviewer in its opening performance last Saturday, was sung and staged to the nines by a top-drawer cast and company.

Set in 18th-century Naples, Cosi fan tutte concerns two young couples who are so smitten with each other that they blurt out declarations like "I would rather be buried alive than live without him!," and "She is a paragon of virtue!," with passionate regularity. Neither the men or women believe that they could ever fall in love with anyone else.

Into this picture of uncomplicated bliss enters one Don Alfonso (Sesto Bruscantini) a worldly-wise cynic who sets out to prove to the men that their idealized notions about love are founded on illusions about human and, particularly, female nature.

Jonathan Mack and Jeffrey Black are well cast, musically and as comic types, in the roles of the earnest young swains Ferrando and Gugliemo. They take up the Don's wager, by which the older man seeks to demonstrate that their lovers will forget them in no time if another attractive pair of men come along and woo them in their absence. They are sure they can prove him wrong.

Alfonso arranges a bogus military call-up to get them out of the way — but, in reality, the newly-minted "soldiers" have stayed on in Naples. Fiordiligi and Dorabella (Carol Vaness and Maria Ewing) have been completely taken in by the ruse however; they're fit to be tied at the idea of such a separation.

Very soon, the errant pair are knocking on their door, but disguised as mustachioed and turbaned "Albanians" who are full of protestations of love for the distraught women. After an initial period of resistance to their ardors, they give in. Ferrando and Gugliemo are aghast at the ease at which their lovers so quickly fall for another pair of men. But Don Alfonso is magnanimous in his victory, for, as he says, "cosi fan tutte" (or, "women are like that").

While the librettist, Lorenzo da Ponte, scores the eternal theme of the fickleness of women in the work, there is a jibe or two aimed at men as well. Ferrando and Gugliemo harbor some unrealistically elevated ideas about the constancy of love, rooted in a view of women which amounts to the old angel/whore dichotomy.

Da Ponte and Mozart treated these themes with a sophistication and comic subtlety that were extremely rare in their day. Cosi fan tutte's director, Sir Peter Hall, has written that "for its first audience, it was the first original opera in modern dress, the first opera about contemporary living, about growing up in the modern world. It came from nowhere it seems — except the full heart of Lorenzo Da Ponte . . . and the searching, anguished perception of the ever-graceful Mozart."

Hall, for many years the director of the renowned National Theatre of Great Britain, has done a faultless job in the mounting of this new production of the opera. Designer John Bury's costumes and sets are absolutely

Alan King

The King of comedy on boxing, acting

By Jim Pickrell, Staff Writer

Alan King has one of those faces that you instantly recognize even if you've never met him before. Standing in front of Irwin Winkler's guest house as I drove up, there wasn't any doubt who he was, even though he didn't have the tuxedo or any of the cigars he likes to use as hand props when he's doing his standup routines. He isn't really the character he plays up onstage, but he's still a bit of a ham, even in person.

King got his start as a comedian at an early age. "I had a band when I was about 14," he explained. "I was a drummer, then I played the bass. We did comedy songs. We were not very good musicians but we were entertaining. I got a job in the mountains as a musician and then got a job as a comic. I was employed full-time as a comedian by 17, mostly in cellar clubs. They didn't have comedy clubs in those days."

Did that seem unusual? "At the time it didn't seem like it. It was just what I wanted to do."

King's push to become a comedian came from his constant need to tell stories and be the center of attention. "The first time you hear Life-long movie extra Alan King portraying a lobster in a dinner salad.

'Memories of Me' is light comedy

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

■ FILM: *Memories of Me. Written by Eric Roth and Billy Crystal. Director Henry Winkler. With Billy Crystal, Alan King, and Jobeth Williams.

Memories of Me is an enjoyable comedy with Billy Crystal as a surgeon who decides it's time to patch things up with his estranged father — the career movie extra and public embarrassment, played by Alan King.

King is perfectly cast in the part of Abe, the father. Always a twinkle in his eye, with a joke ready for all occasions, he tries hard; but to Crystal, Abe is is a complete failure. Abe's life-long dream of becoming an actor has come to nothing, and his abandonment of the family to go to Los Angeles to pursue it has left a lot of hard feelings.

Billy Crystal is best known for his roles in Soap and Saturday Night Live. Here he puts his retiring, almost shy style of verbal fencing to work as a New York heart surgeon who realizes his own impermanence when a heart attack puts him on the patient's side of the bed.

He decides it's time to come out to Los Angeles and visit his father, though in the few times he has done it before, the situation has quickly degenerated to open fighting.

Some of the best scenes happen in L.A., where Crystal's character watches his father on sets working at a variety of laughable humiliating movie extra jobs — the lobster in a dinner salad, the hospital patient in a soap opera, the murmuring man in the crowd — all the time wisecracking and posturing and saying he's got the greatest job there is. He's the "King of the Extra's."

As the story unfolds, Crystal learns to accept his father for what he is — not particularly successful, but a grand old character and a human being all the same. And the two find that despite their very different ways of life the still have much in common.

Strengths of the movie lie in "The best 'how to be successful' book I've ever read for aspiring young businesswomen"

—Abigail Van Buren ("Dear Abby")

Congratulations! You've gotten one of America's best educations at UCLA. Now it's time for the best "success training" a college woman can buy—from the bestselling business-book author whom Gloria Steinem has called "a man who is public relations at its very best." Henry C. Rogers is the founder of the premier Rogers & Cowan public relations firm. His advice is "practical and hard-hitting" (Los Angeles Herald Examiner); his other books, like Rogers' Rules for Success and The One Hat Solution, have become "bibles" for aspiring businesspeople.

Now Henry Rogers has written a guidebook just for you—a blueprint designed for college graduates who want to build a career—not just hold down a job. In ROGERS' RULES FOR BUSINESSWOMEN, you'll get it all—

- GETTING STARTED
- 10 CAREER-BUILDING STRATEGIES
- MANAGING YOUR BOSS
- SEX AND LOVE IN THE WORKPLACE
- OFFICE POLITICS
- MR. RIGHT, THE BIOLOGICAL CLOCK, AND OTHER DISTRACTIONS
- WOMEN ENTREPRENEURS
- HOW TO GET THE JOB YOU REALLY WANT
- SUCCESS STORIES (IN THEIR OWN WORDS) FROM WOMEN WHO HAVE MADE IT

"Rogers' pithy remarks are of value to most neophyte businesspeople ... [with] inspirational testimonials from successful businesswomen."

superb.

The atmosphere of an 18th-century Naples is recreated with great skill. The painted backdrop of the Bay of Naples, with Mt. Vesuvius in the distance, very evocatively establishes a sense of place, and the interior sets are equally good. There was a tactile quality to the grainy look of the exterior walls, a feeling of weight and solidity to them.

The production is beautifully lit by Lighting Designer Marie Barrett, with a wonderful range of nuances imparted to night and day scenes. Act II's second scene, set in a garden at night, is a particular stand-out.

The Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, under the baton of guest conductor Christof Perick, was in fine fettle, with first-rate solo work from all sections. Grant Gershon's harpsichord continuo was admirably clear and crisp. The Los Angeles Master Chorale performed ably in the scenes calling for choruses of townspeople and soldiers.

With two more performances scheduled, on Friday evening at 8 p.m., and Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m., Cosi fan tutte is recommended to all operaphiles on campus.

KING: Comedy

someone laugh, it's a sense of power," he said. "I was always carrying on on street corners and at school and in places where I shouldn't have been. I was the corner clown. I used to do singing impressions. I used to do whatever it took to get somebody to put a spotlight on you."

Hard work and persistence paid off. King has spent 47 years working in show business, doing stand-up comedy, acting, producing and writing. "I had 83 appearance on the Ed Sullivan show, which is something of a record," he boasts.

"I never thought of doing anything else," King tells me while we're talking about stand-up comedy. It's not true — he did work for a while as a professional boxer. "Somebody offered me 50 dollars for a fight," he recalls. "I was pretty good with my hands. I was very athletic, and I would do anything to make a buck, anything to get out of the neighborhood."

King fought 26 fights; mostly short three-rounders, but brutal nonetheless. "I got beaten pretty good in my last fight, and I thought, this is not for me. There has got to be an easier way to make a living."

In his most recent movie, Memories of Me, King plays Abe Polin, a failed actor who has found his niche in Hollywood working as a movie extra. "We made this film for love and deferment," he says. The story centers on the relationship between Abe and his son (played by Billy Crystal). "I was crazy about Billy Crystal's work before I even met him. He sees right through things," King said.

With his easy-going, confident and boisterous nature, King is perfect in the role of the father who covers his own inadequacies and failures with a running string of jokes and diversions.

"Actors are above the title and below the title. We like to think of ourselves as behind the title" is Abe Polin's way of defending his career as an extra.

"My father was very funny. He used comedy as a weapon," King recalls. "He was an old socialist and unionist. My father did odd jobs and we survived. During the difficult times of the depression, if you didn't laugh then you folded up and died. He was quite a guy."

In addition to acting, King was also one of the producers of the film Memories of Me. So was Billy Crystal. It's a power-splitting situation that could be difficult, even with an experienced actor/director like Henry Winkler. But it didn't cause problems. "Billy and I came to this agreement without discussing it," King explained, talking of his role as actor. "You can't wear your producer's hat to the set."

Though he is most visible when acting, in recent years King has proven himself an able businessman, heavily involved in the management of Odyssey Entertainment and Astoria Studios — the famous landmark in New York — which was on the verge of being bulldozed until King and a group of other show biz personalities pushed to have it declared a historic landmark.

Though it isn't really making much of a profit yet, they were able to turn it around and keep Astoria in business as the last major studio in New York. The Cotton Club was filmed there, and it houses the Cosby Show. Woody Allen shoots all his movies there too. King muses that perhaps it will earn something for his grandchildren, but it's clear that he wasn't in it for the money anyway.

"I've had ups and downs, my career has been like a roller coaster," King says of his chosen profession. "I love the stand-up. I'm never going to give that up. Now it's a luxury to me, I don't have to do it. Producing is what I really spend most of my time doing. You sit around one day at sixty five and say — I could have done, I should have done . . . " But King has no regrets about his choice of show business and comedy.

"That's what I wanted to do."

ARMATRADING: Dynamic

songwriters, Armatrading's groundbreaking styles have been absorbed by recently successful artists like Suzanne Vega, Kate Bush, Toni Childs, and (most notably) Tracy Chapman. Now that her disciples have made such incredible inroads to commercial acceptance (Chapman's album is double-platinum-plus), Joan's potential to transcend cult status to widespread pop success appears imminent. Imminent because the quality and appeal of her latest recording, The Shouting Stage, is so readily apparent.

While the more roots-oriented folk/pop of Joan's early days (characterized by records like Joan Armatrading and The Key) has found pervasive favor through Chapman, Armatrading continues to progress with her own sound. Folk characteristics still color much of her singing, but the music found on The Shouting Stage shows a more sophisticated, soulful, and sometimes jazzy approach that has already attracted some 140,000 people to buy the album.

A few highlights from the disc reveal the many facets of this well-rounded production. Jazz and R&B meet in the sweeping rhythms of "The Devil I Know," a track that sports the roaming basslines of Pino Paladino (Paul Young's bassist). "Living For You," the first single, catches the ear with its African inflections, spirited brass sounds, and Joan's elastic vocal range.

The drums of Manu Katche (sideman for Peter Gabriel, Robbie Robertson, and Joni Mitchell) add percussive punch to songs like "Words" and "Watch Your Step." "Straight Talk," perhaps the album's most infectious piece, bears Armatrading's West Indian heritage with its ska and reggae inflections, brought to lyrical fruition by Wesley Magoogan's dancing saxophone.

The ballads "Stronger Love," "The Shouting Stage," and "Dark Truths" are songs to ponder by in response to the brutal honesty of Armatrading's verses and the exquisite spareness of their instrumentation. Special guest guitarist Mark Knopfler (the former leader of the Dire Straits) props up his rubbery guitar licks against Joan's octave-ranging singing on the arresting "Did I Make You Up."

For those who have heard Armatrading's records or seen her on stage (she performed her classic song "Love And Affection" at 1987's Amnesty International concert and appeared at last summer's Freedom Fest in London), The Shouting Stage will more than fill the void left by the two years since the release of 1986's Sleight Of Hand LP. But for the many who have yet to hear Joan, this new album is a perfect introduction to her dynamic musical persona.

DJAVAN: Brazilian

have made him a pop superstar in his native country. In the last few years, Djavan has slowly built up an American following that has made his most recent imports, like 1984's Lilas (CBS International), hot sellers among foreign products.

Sensing the potential of an artist who can get Americans to buy his music despite the fact that he has recorded exclusively in Portuguese, Columbia has put out Djavan's first full-scale nationally distributed American release. The ten songs on his latest disc, called Bird Of Paradise, present a consummate pop composer and performer who expertly sews in threads of jazz and R&B into his musical tapestry.

Quincy Jones (who so happens to own the American publishing rights to Djavan's works) summed up his sound by saying that he is the "synthesis of American and Brazilian influences. He's uptown . . . hip."

As he has done with previous albums, Djavan fuses his cross-cultural influences by employing the services of some top musicians from Brazil and America, including percussionist Paulinho Da Costa and drummer Teo Lima from Brazil, and keyboardists Greg Philiganes and George Duke, and drummer Harvey Mason from the States. Also filling the instrumental roles are American producer/keyboardist Ronnie Foster and Djavan himself on acoustic guitar.

In a clear attempt to attract more American listeners, Djavan sings in English on three cuts. Happily, his first stab at English phrasings turns out to be nearly as colorful as his Portuguese musings. On the title track, the English text (written by jazz/pop performer Michael Franks) allows Djavan to translate some of the images of his exotic, tropical homeland in the form of a lush ballad. The other two English-worded tracks, penned by Brock Walsh, have intriguing subject matters. "Stephen's Kingdom" is a percussive upbeat piece that prophesies the coming of a free world that South African martyr Stephen Biko envisioned. "Miss Susanna" reveals Djavan's delicate guitar work as he performs a ditty about a black slave who is being seduced by the master's daughter.

But it is in his native Portuguese that the nuances of Djavan's soulful vocal style sparkle. The singer swings with "Carnaval In Rio (Carnaval No Rio)" and sambas on "Apple (Maca)." His rather thin but remarkably nimble voice is at its most enrapturing on the offbeat ballad "Bouquet," and most jazzy on "Take Me (Me Leve)." All of the often-poetic Portuguese lyrics were conjured up entirely by the singer/songwriter.

On his album Bird Of Paradise, Djavan's songs (he did most of the composing himself) ingratiate, stimulate, and captivate the listener with substantial pop songs that make him a kind of Brazilian hybrid of Paul Simon, Al Jarreau, and Stevie Wonder. As a mere change of pace from the all-too-familiar American pop formulas, this album of mellow yet subtly complex music makes refreshing listening. And if artists like Djavan can keep delivering music this imaginative, the new Brazilian tide will be coming in for a long time to come.

Foster

that's the only thing that characterizes the victim. They're just as objectified by the narrative of the screenplay as they are by the act."

Sarah is far from being yet another victimized debutante as seen in countless television movies. "There are things you don't like about her. She isn't articulate. She's frustrated and occasionaly lashes out in anger; she isn't on top of her emotions."

In preparing for the challenges of The Accused, Foster said she merely created her own vision of the character, opening herself up to the realities of Sarah Tobias. "I researched the facts, statistics, newspaper stories, but as far as emotional, character research, I don't think you need to do that," Foster said. "I think you need to say the words and do the actions, and I can't think of anything that's ever going to prepare you to do that. If you can't open yourself to what's real, then it's really just about your own therapy and self-indulgence."

Career highs

Taxi Driver, Hotel New Hampshire, and The Accused are the biggest movie moments in my life," Foster said, "each for entirely different reasons. Movies are like relationships that you have. You love them all for different reasons and you get different things out of them. They don't have to all be this emotional experience for them to be important to you and significant in your life, or for them to make you grow up."

In the beginning of her film career, however, Foster didn't think her relationships with film would be totally satisfying. "Creatively, I never thought I was going to be able to reconcile literature and film," explained the 1985 Yale graduate with a B.A. in literature. "I always thought that film was never going to be enough, when in fact that was my problem. I wasn't extending myself enough, putting enough energy into it."

Now Foster can't think of doing anything else. "It (acting)'s like living, and now as I get older, is even more satisfying.

Over a career that has spanned most of her life, Foster has definitely learned how to tap into her emotions, and as a result has delivered many memorable performances. But what she hopes to accomplish in The Accused is not only to deliver another memorable performance as it is to open the minds of the people who see the film.

"It's a kind of subject that is so universal, so provocative emotionally, spiritually and intellectually. It's like this incredible bridge to communication. It's really about being able to put yourself in the head of each one of the characters and say there are parts of me in the accused, there are parts of me in the witness, the victims and the lawyer, and not to make judgments of bad-good, but to see what the beginnings of human cruelty are."

OTHER CUTS

'Memories'

strong acting, good situations, and clever dialogue.

Weaknesses lie in the area of dramatic plot. While the movie is continuously entertaining, at times it loses momentum. It is more of a character piece than a strong story. There are also a couple of Deus Ex Machina heart-attach coincidences that are almost embarrassing.

The comparison that immediately comes to mind is the film Da, which had an extremely scattered story but hit it more aggressively, with an embarrassing old goat of a father who was not only unsuccessful, but also aggressively uneducated and belligerent. King's part in he script could have been stronger if he had been a little less secure and confident.

All in all, the film is good natured and entertaining. Competently directed by Henry "The Fonz" Winkler, it is weak in conflict and suspense, but offers an enjoyable evening at the movies.

Filmmaker of controversy

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Having made films about political violence on three continents, Greek-born filmmaker Costa-Gavras now turns his attention to racial terrorism in the United States.

The movie is Betrayed, in which Debra Winger portrays an undercover FBI agent who becomes the lover of Tom Berenger, a Midwest farmer who leads a paramilitary white supremacy sect. The story begins with the murder of a controversial radio talk-show host and includes the robbing of banks to finance the movement.

Once again a Costa-Gavras film has paralleled news events. His most famous films portrayed U.S. involvement in the overthrow of Chile's military regime (Missing), and military despotism in Greece (Z). He has also dealt with torture in Latin America in State of Siege, Eastern Europe Stalinism in The Confession and the Palestinian issue in Israel with Hanna K.

Costa-Gavras, who has lived in France for many years, is no stranger to controversy. He recently talked with accustomed frankness about his work and politics during a visit to California for the Hollywood opening of Betrayed.

Q: Is there something unique about racism in the United States?

A: Here it's different. The expression of racism is probably much more violent. The ideology of racism is the same everywhere, unfortunately.

Q: Did you do a lot of research for Betrayed?

A: Yes. The moment I started to do the movie, which means three years ago, I started doing research in the different fields. You find everything in television or in books or in newspaper interviews. It's extraordinary; everything is there. I saw hours of tapes.

A lot of things happened during and after my research. Howard Beach happened while I was researching. Then the Bernhard Goetz story. All those things are extraordinary. I think the last 10-15 years is a kind of wave of racism.

(Costa-Gavras was referring to a Dec. 20, 1986, incident in the Howard Beach section of Queens, N.Y., in which a group of young whites beat and chased some blacks, resulting in the death of one black. Goetz, who is white, was convicted in June 1987 of a weapons violation in the New York subway shooting of four black youths he said he thought were going to rob him.)

Q: Do you think racism has become more prevalent than before?

A: Yes, I think so. I do not know the reasons. I try to understand why. I think it always was there, somehow. But people feel authorized to express themselves much more openly.

Q: The most shocking scene in Betrayed is when the farmers, armed with automatic guns, stage a kind of nighttime foxhunt of a young black. Do you think that could happen in this country?

A: No, I don't have any direct evidence that it happened. What I'm trying to do there is make the scene as strong as possible, just to show how unbearable, how frightening can be racist murder . . . I don't see much difference between killing a man on the street because he is black or has a different religion, or hunting him. I tried to dramatize how unacceptable that can be.

Q: Why did you choose Debra Winger?

A: Debra has the quality of being a strong person as a character and an excellent actress. She also has a very personal involvement in what is going on in the world. Those three elements are essential for someone to play that kind of role.

Q: And Tom Berenger?

A: I like Tom's cowboy style — handsome and clean, he has that kind of face. And then it's like the moon: he has a dark side. All of us have our dark side. The important thing is how far we go with our dark side.

Q: As an outsider, do you think you have a better view of America?

A: Maybe not better. Different, surely, because I have so much curiosity about your society. Everything that happens here has a direct effect on where we are coming from, the smaller countries of Europe, socially and artistically

We have a curiosity and also a tenderness about your country, because you have given us so many things: movies, theater, literature, music. These things we grew up on.

Q: Your films always seem to have political overtones. Is this because of your particular psyche?

A: I prefer to say "ethical," a more hopeful view. But if we say "political," I think all movies contain political meaning. Every movie reflects the philosophy or the ethics of its authors. Mine are no exception.

Q: Do you deplore that outpouring of mindless violence and silly comedies that pour forth from the studios, especially in the summertime?

A: Oh yes, yes . . . Let's take an example: the last Rambo. Everybody says, "Let's be peaceful, let's try to understand each other, East-West." Then you have something that exploits passion and hate and all those things.

But on the contrary, there is in the summertime some extraordinary qualities (in films). I like very much the light movies. I like to go and have fun; it's very pleasant.

A's ready for Dodgers

By STEVE WILSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. — One look at the dark, fiery eyes of Tony La Russa or a view of the Oakland Athletics' workout is enough to wipe out any notion the American League champs are settling into smugness before the World Series.

No team in 19 years of major league playoffs has had five days off before the start of the World Series — five days to get bloated with self-satisfaction and stale on the field.

The Athletics worked out for the second straight day Wednesday, determined to keep the edge that enabled them to win eight of 11 after they clinched the division title Sept. 19, then swept the Red Sox in four straight.

The team is relaxed and loose. No one is pressing or looking anxious. But there is no mistaking the determination to complete the goal La Russa and the players set early in the season: to win the World Series and not just the division or pennant.

Or, as La Russa describes it, to negotiate the final side of "the pyramid."

La Russa never let this team ease up, not when it won 14 straight and 18 of 19 early in the season and not when it was breezing to the AL West championship.

His players maintain the same focus on winning the World Series and proving they are the best in baseball.

The champagne party after the victory over Boston was brief and somewhat restrained. Jose Canseco had a few sips of bubbly and declined another. Carney Lansford sat by his locker, utterly happy but holding back a little.

"I can remember winning a division title with the '79 (California) Angels," said Lansford. "We were so satisfied with that, we died in the playoffs (against the Baltimore Orioles).

"This year, nobody has talked about being satisfied. That includes right now. We still have a job to do."

Campus Media and Minority Issues

Journalists from both on- and off-campus will gather to discuss current media coverage of minority issues. Reporters, editors and broadcasters will explore ways that campus media can better report on controversial subjects.

Krueger beats Niners

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The San Francisco 49ers have agreed to pay former defensive lineman Charles Krueger more than $1 million after being found liable for fraudulently failing to reveal the severity of his crippling knee injury, it was reported Wednesday.

The tentative settlement would dismiss the National Football League team's appeal of a judge's ruling ordering the 49ers to pay Krueger $2.36 million.

"We're disappointed, but if both sides are unhappy with the settlement then it's probably fair," said Krueger's lawyer, Clark Leslie. "This thing's been going on for 10 years, and I'd like my client to enjoy the benefits before he's on Social Security."

He confirmed general terms of the settlement reported Wednesday by The Recorder, a legal newspaper.

The 49ers' lawyer and press office did not return telephone calls.

Though the exact details of the settlement are being kept confidential, Leslie said Krueger would get about $750,000, after legal fees and expenses.

"At least this will guarantee Charlie financial security for the rest of his life," Leslie said. "Plus, he feels he has raised the consciousness of present and former players who will, in the future, question the treatment they are receiving."

Krueger, now 48, a mainstay of the 49ers' line from 1958 to 1973, ruptured a ligament in his left knee in 1963 and underwent surgery. A state appeals court ruled in February 1987 that the team never told him that a ligament was missing from his knee and failed to advise him of the risk he was running by playing in severe pain for the rest of his career.

The 49ers treated Krueger with repeated and questionable steroid injections over the years, and never told him that X-rays showed degeneration of the knee and that he risked permanent injury by continuing to play, the court said.

The court said Krueger first learned of the damage to his knee in 1978, and now has traumatic arthritis and an irreversible degenerative condition, cannot stand for long periods or run, and cannot walk on stairs without severe pain.

crowd. . .it would be nice to have that kind of support in our own stadium, where you can hardly hear it."

Perhaps Cornish gives the clearest insight into his personality with a dramatic message he sends to all UCLA fans: "The more enthusiasm, the better it is for all of us. No matter whom we're playing, or what the circumstances are, we'd definitely appreciate it if they could stay in the game with us."

Whether his future lies in the NFL or in an upscale boutique, at least one thing is certain: Frank Edgar Cornish is a big man.

Dodgers win NLCS over Mets

By Jim Donaghy
AP Baseball Writer

LOS ANGELES — The Los Angeles Dodgers won the National League pennant Wednesday night by beating the favored New York Mets 6-0 in Game 7 behind Orel Hershiser's five-hitter, completing one of the greatest turnarounds in major league history.

The Dodgers will host Game 1 of the 85th World Series Saturday against Oakland in a rematch of the 1974 Series won by the Athletics in five games.

Hershiser, who finished the season with a record 59 consecutive scoreless innings, started Games 1 and 3 without getting a decision and saved Game 4. Of the 65 innings pitched by the Dodgers, Hershiser accounting for 24 2-3.

He broke the major league playoff mark of 22 2-3 innings, set in 1986 by Boston's Roger Clemens. The old NL playoff mark was 18 innings by Mike Scott of Houston, also in 1986.

It is the Dodgers' ninth pennant since moving to Los Angeles in 1958 and their first since 1981, when they went on to beat the New York Yankees in the World Series.

The Dodgers scored first in six of the seven games against the Mets and made things easy for Hershiser by scoring a run in the first off loser Ron Darling. Los Angeles then chased him with five runs in the second as New York made three sloppy fielding plays.

The Dodgers finished the regular season 94-67, a 43-game improvement over last year's 73-89 record. Only six times previously has an NL team finished 15 games or more below .500 one season, and rallied to finish 20 games or more above .500 the next. The Dodgers were also 73-89 in 1986.

In 1960, Cincinnati finished 67-87 and rallied to win the NL flag with a 93-61 record in 1961. Last season, Minnesota won the American League pennant and World Series after finishing 71-91 in 1986.

Steve Sax, 12-for-40 lifetime against Darling, got the Dodgers started with a single and moved to third on Mickey Hatcher's double down the left-field line. Kirk Gibson, hamstrung with a pulled left hamstring, then hit a scrifice fly to deep center field.

The Mets and Darling self-destructed in the Dodgers' big second inning.

Mike Scioscia and Jeff Hamilton led off with singles and Darling misjudged Alfredo Griffin's bunt, allowing it to fall in for a single to load the bases.

Hershiser hit a one-hopper to third that rookie Gregg Jefferies bobbled for an error, allowing Scioscia to score and reloading the bases. Sax followed with a two-run single to chase Darling and bring on Dwight Gooden, who started Game 4. It was Gooden's first major league relief appearance.

After Hatcher advanced the runners with a groundout, the Mets walked Gibson to load the bases and set up a double play.

The strategy almost worked when Marshall hit a grounder to second. But Wally Backman's flip to shortstop Kevin Elster was wild allowing the fourth run of the inning to score. John Shelby capped the scoring with a sacrifice fly to left.

Thomas

pient in track, he needed clearance to continue football, which the NCAA granted Wednesday.

John Smith, Thomas' sprint coach, was not sure what effect this move would have on the upcoming track season. Smith just returned from the Seoul Olympics and has not had any opportunity to speak with Thomas.

Thomas was not at practice on Wednesday, but if he did appear today, he would be able to participate, according to Bill Rees, assistant football coach. Rees also noted that Thomas did play football his first two years at Hawthorne High School, which was six years ago.

In track, Thomas is a returning All-American and school record holder in three events: the 200, 400 relay, and 1600 relay— with the latter time of 2:59.94 also an NCAA record.

If Thomas elects to play football, he would play wide receiver— possibly becoming a valuable deep threat that the Bruins could use. Thomas has run a 10.15 100 meters, and would be one of the fastest players in the game.

Wide receiver coach Karl Dorrell noted that Thomas was a quick learner in his few days on the practice field, and though Thomas had a great deal to improve on, he expressed optimism that Thomas could contribute to the program.

Applications for admission for the 1989-90 School year at the Seeds University Elementary School, the laboratory school of the Graduate School of Education, located on the UCLA campus, are now available. Deadline to apply: December 31, 1988. Please call 825-1801 for information. MINORITY APPLICATIONS ARE ENCOURAGED.

Frank Cornish is never at a loss for a celebratory dance. Witness his serious moves after UCLA's raucous 41-28 win over Nebraska in September. At left, Cornish is on the far left.

Cornish

on the El.

"I don't know about the pros," Cornish says thoughtfully. "Of course, I wouldn't turn down the opportunity to play—I don't see anyone who would—but, this being my fourth year, I've seen quite a few players I thought would make it and didn't make it. That puts it all in perspective."

Frank's hereditary predilection for the Bears, however, does not prevent him from considering other employers. "I'll play for any team that wants to pay me a lot of money," Cornish says, for lack of a better adverb, frankly.

Before he worries about the NFL, though, Cornish realizes that he must concern himself with the remaining year and a half of his college tenure. "I'm just trying to finish out my career at UCLA and, hopefully, stay healthy. But," Cornish adds, reflecting on his desire to stay uninjured, "you never know. . . ."

If graduation from UCLA should happen to mark his retirement from the gridiron, Cornish plans to begin pursuing his life-long dream of opening a chain of specialty men's clothing stores.

As Cornish explained in a Los Angeles Times interview at the beginning of the season, the same physical magnitude that has made him a formidable lineman has from his earliest days threatened to turn his wardrobe closet into a polyester nightmare. Thus, after 21 years of hassles at the mall, Cornish is determined to end the plight of big men everywhere.

"I'm interested in the big man's clothing business," Cornish says.

Even in the bustling metropolis of Los Angeles, Frank has had considerable difficulty in buying suitably large garments.

"I can't find anything that will fit me in Westwood," complains Cornish. "I usually shop when I go back home to Chicago. When I do shop here, I shop at Rochester's Beverly Hills Big and Tall."

Presently, however, Cornish is thinking more about the Rose Bowl race than either the NFL or his career as a clothier. Without underestimating the importance of the November 19 showdown with USC, Cornish is very careful about not looking past "lesser" conference rivals such as Arizona, Washington State and even Cal.

"The 'SC game is a long way off," notes Cornish, "I'm concerned about the teams before the 'SC game. Of course, that's a whole new season for us, when it comes down to that game. It will definitely be a competitive one. . .when it gets here.

"Every team has the potential to sneak up on you and beat you at any time. I just want to play a consistent game as a team, put some points on the board and have our defense perform well."

Cornish feels that the October 22 night game at Arizona will prove to be a particularly hard-fought battle. "Whenever we play Arizona," says Cornish, "it's tough; they come up to hit you. It's going to be exciting—it's my first trip to the University of Arizona."

Cornish would like to see and hear more support from Bruin fans out at the Rose Bowl. Discussing UCLA's 24-17 win over the University of Washington in Seattle, Cornish says, "Seattle has an exciting cry from an early 2.50 mark. He's allowed only just three goals in 796 minutes for a 0.33 average since September 10th, and with six shutouts is on pace to equal or break his personal record of 11 set in his freshman campaign.

And if the junior ever forgets, all he's got to do is look at his hands. On the fingers of the right glove is imprinted 'just say no,' and the left glove reads 'just say nyet' (Russian for 'no') for emphasis.

"We can have humor on the team. Everybody likes the light role," stated Nistl. "You chuckle when you say these things, but they're so positive that they make you work harder. You want to be able to hold up your end."

And who deserves the credit?

"Tim Harris (assistant coach) started it- his presence keeps us going. The respect Sigi (Schmid, head coach) and the players give him is incredible—he's more like a friend than a coach. You don't want to let down your best friend, so when Tim says something, you take it personally and work harder."

The offense itself has not let anyone down as of late, even without the 'just say yes' attitude, due in part to the emergence of Ray Fernandez as the playmaker. Fernandez had one goal and two assists against Stanford and California this past weekend, and maybe is the final cog in the UCLA scoring machine.

"We feel that Ray has improved his game. He'll be the first one to tell you that he's gone through a slump," said Dean Wurzberger, UCLA assistant coach.

Fernandez was moved from midfield to forward after the 1-0 loss to Santa Clara, and since September 25th has three goals and three assists.

"Ray is very skillful, a good finisher, and plays well with his back to the goal. Billy (Thompson) was working too hard up front. He and Ray now make a good combination," added Wurzberger.

Thompson has reaped the benefits of the change, scoring twice this past weekend. Yet Fernandez acts as if nothing has changed.

Wurzberger noted that "Ray is very low-key, changes are very subtle around him. His play this weekend was a notch higher, an excellent sign for him to finish the season stronger."

If Loyola is anything like in the past, then UCLA and Fernandez may not need much help in scoring goals. The Lions have lost two games in the last two years to the Bruins by an aggregate score of 10-1, and a 7-0 loss to Santa Clara on Tuesday indicates that nothing much has really changed.

Loyola is 2-6-3 on the season, and has been outscored by a average margin of 3-1. Rich Torres is the leading scorer with three goals and one assist.

"We are looking to score a lot of goals. This game was scheduled to allow our players to prove they can score in collegiate soccer," said Wurzberger.

And as for the big match at home with the University of San Francisco Sunday at 2:00, "We're looking at this as a tune-up match before USF," added the Bruin assistant.

Concurred Nistl, "Obviously the team is anxious to play USF, but we can't overlook Loyola. We need solid play against them, and we want to look good on television."

Just a note, the Loyola game will be televised on Prime Ticket on Friday at 7:30 p.m.

NOTEBOOK: A grab bag of items

UCLA's current 18-1 record matches the season total of 1971 when the Bruins won their second NCAA title.

Coming Back: UCLA potential All-American tight end Charles Arbuckle is almost fully recovered from his knee injury which he suffered versus Long Beach State. Donahue stated that the ligaments have tightened, but only Arbuckle knows when he will be ready. Arbuckle says he will be back to face Arizona in Tucson on October 22.

Defensive lineman Bryan Wilcox, who suffered a contusion on his leg in the Oregon State game, is listed as questionable for the Cal match-up.

And, finally, highly-touted sophomore tailback Brian Brown will be in uniform for his first game of the season this Saturday at Cal. Brown is expected to provide a tremendous boost to an already-solid running game and will return kickoffs along with Shawn Wills.

Volleyball potpourri: The UCLA women's volleyball team's 14-game winning streak is the longest since the 20-0 start in 1983. . . .UCLA is currently one of three undefeated teams in Division I volleyball. The others are the University of New Mexico and William and Mary in Virginia. . . .Junior middle blocker and All-American Daiva Tomkus leads the Pac-10 conference in both hitting percentage and service aces. Her .417 hitting percentage is the sixth best in the nation as of last week. . . .Senior setter and All-American Ann Boyer is currently seventh in the nation in set assists.

A marked man: Donahue hopes that his defense con generate some more pressure on opposing quarterbacks.

"We are not generating as much heat on opposing quarterbacks as much as we would like to. People have zeroed in on Carnell Lake. He is a marked guy."

Last year, Lake led the conference in sacks with 13, and came into this year a pre-season All-American and a leading candidate for the Butkus award, which is giving to the nation's top linebacker.

As a result of the increased offensive attention to keep the ball away from Lake, he has just one quarterback sack this season. He does, however, rank fourth on the team with 34 total tackles, six for a loss.

Scoring wars: Redshirt senior Hank Peterson is currently leading the water polo team in scoring, ahead of junior Alex Rousseau, who, last year, set a single season scoring record with 79 goals.

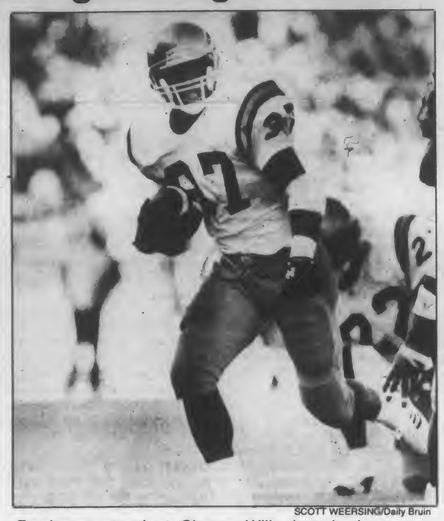
Coughing it up: Last year after five games, the UCLA football team had a turnover ratio of plus six. So far this season, UCLA is minus four.



SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Freshman standout Shawn Wills has had no problem in getting into the end zone.

"You're talking about a huge swing, and its bugging me a lot," Donahue said.

Ailing runners: The men's cross country team has more than its fair share of assorted ailments to deal with in preparing for Saturday's race at Cal Poly SLO.

Victor Santamaria, the Bruins' number two runner, has a quadriceps injury and has trained minimally since the Stanford meet two weeks ago. "I'm concerned about his readiness," head coach Bob Larsen said.

Richard Erbes has been suffering a hip problem and has missed a few days of training, while Jim Ortiz is still recovering from a respiratory ailment aggravated at Stanford. Ortiz, however, should run Saturday.

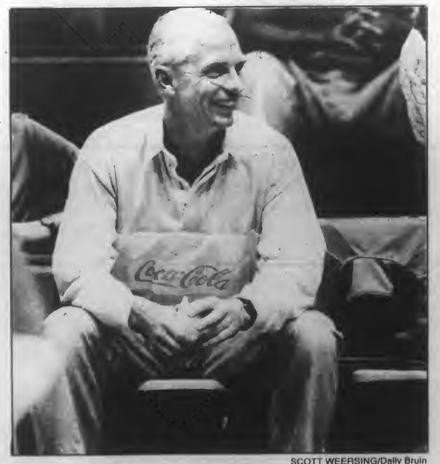
The Fernando of Football: Does Shawn Wills have nice moves? Just ask Donahue.

"Shawn is like a guy who throws a screwball in baseball. He is hard to hit. He just kind of worms his way up there. Coming into UCLA, Shawn was not a superstar. He wasn't quite a super national recruit. But we saw some real balance and competitiveness in the films. I had no idea he would be unaffected by the guys in the other shirts (defense)."

Three cheers: Kudos to harrier Kathleen Hopkins who was named women's runner of the week after her effort at the CSUN Matador Invitational. Hopkins placed sixth overall (20:55) on the unusually long and hot course in pacing the Bruins to a team victory.

"Fuzzy wuzzy was a Bruin. . .": Senior outside linebacker Eric Smith has been sidelined several weeks as he recovers from a concussion suffered in the Nebraska game. Head coach Terry Donahue explained that Smith will return after his headaches and visual problems go away and the doctors give him the thumbs up. "He will not be cleared for action until the fuzziness goes away," Donahue said.

The head coach also explained that Smith's new nickname is Fuzzy.



SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

UCLA women's volleyball coach Andy Banachowski has had plenty to grin about this season as his team is No. 1.

Along with his picks, Lee offers a few observations

The Clairvoyant One

Lee Boyko

Last Week: 4 Wins, 3 Losses

Overall: 4 Wins, 3 Losses

RETRACTION: Please be informed that Auburn did play at LSU last week and not in Alabama, as erroneously reported in this column. And while I'm in this soul-bearing mood, I must confess that Oklahoma State's Barry Sanders is having the best season of anyone in college football thus far. His 813 yards rushing (in only four games) and 22.5 points a game are national tops. Oh, and Sanders was also leading the nation in kickoff return average. A big game against Nebraska will propel him to the forefront of national media attention. A bad game could take him out of the Heisman race all together. .

Don't believe any of this Steve Walsh-for-the-Heisman malarkey the eastern press is trying to force-feed us. He is a good player on a good team, and does his job with yeoman efficiency, but as Mr. Bentsen would say, "I've worked with Testaverde. You're no Testaverde." Walsh is a clutch performer, yes, but Doug Flutie has more charisma in his right pinky. . .

Louisiana State's Tiger Stadium continues to be Poltergeist III in 3-D for visitors, as previously unbeaten Auburn took some Gothic Cajun mysticism on the chin, losing 7-6. Stay tuned for November 19 when Miami checks into the NCAA's Bates Motel.

OKLAHOMA ST. (4-0) @ NEBRASKA (5-1) -9

Title this one Barry Sanders' rite of passage. Teamed with one of the nation's passing efficiency leaders, Mike Gundy, the Cowboys' tailback could give Nebraska fits. Nebraska looked like Tyson in knocking out Kansas, 63-10, and it wasn't even that close. The 'Huskers led 35-nothing early in the second quarter. Winner is conference frontrunner.
Pick: OKLAHOMA ST.

SYRACUSE (4-1) @ PENN ST. (4-1) -4 1/2

Key mid-season eastern match-up. Both come off impressive wins, but both have stubbed their toes against inferior opposition. The Orangemen gained 515 yards against early-season rebel Rutgers. Syracuse draws a rested West Virginia at the Carrier Dome next week. Penn St. appears to have shaken off the loss of running back extraordinaire Blair Thomas. A game that should go down to the final kick.
Pick: SYRACUSE

MIAMI (4-0) -4 @ NOTRE DAME (5-0)

AC/DC couldn't have said it any better: for those about to rock, we salute you. And we salute Miami and Notre Dame, who are about to rock each other hard in South Bend. Notre Dame hasn't looked better in a decade, and Miami is, well, Miami. Jimmy Johnson visits the Golden Dome -- sounds like a scene from The Omen. How else but a pact with the devil do you explain that the Hurricanes always win? With two weeks for Miami to prepare, it's academic.
Pick: MIAMI

MINNESOTA (2-2-1) @ INDIANA (4-0-1) -19

Could have been a repeat of last year's match-up of two undefeateds had Minnesota held up its end of the bargain. The Gophers were supposed to be more than just close to Canada this year. The defense, led by linebacker Jon Leverenz (an impressive 162 tackles in '87) couldn't stop a Krishna from selling incense to minors. It'll be a great contest between the Big-10's two running Thompsons—Indy's Anthony (190 yards against Ohio St.) and Minny's Darrell (156 yards against Northwestern). Hoosiers can't afford to have next week at Ann Arbor on their mind, let alone Iowa the week after. And yet Indiana was leading Ohio St. 35-0 at one point! Quarterback David Schnell is the glue to the Hoosier attack. In a conference flurting for passers, Schnell's savvy and pin-point accuracy could germinate roses.
Pick: INDIANA

WASHINGTON (4-1) @ USC (5-0) -14

The last two Rose Bowl-losing Pac-10 teams collide. Last week 71,000 watched Washington hold the ball 11 minutes longer than its beloved Sun Devils. Quarterback Cary Conklin will have to be on. This is the Huskies' second straight road grass game. The Trojans come off a clubbing of Musgrave-less Oregon. Huskies have covered the last two weeks, SC has covered the last three.
Pick: WASHINGTON

ERIK DEUTSCH/Daily Bruin

According to our prognasticator Lee Boyko, Troy Aikman's Heisman hopes are not threatened by Miami quarterback Steve Walsh. They are, however, threatened by Oklahoma State's Barry Sanders.

ALABAMA (4-1) -9 @ TENNESSEE (0-5)

Two teams that symbolize the SEC's decline. 'Bama without pre-season Heisman winner Bobby Humphrey is like Roy Firestone without Botany 500—just another schmoe. The Tide passed for 0 yards against Mississippi, and has looked awful against the South's bum-of-the-week club. Tennessee is depleted on defense and its receivers are never open for the capable arm of Jeff Francis. The Vols are steadily manufacturing their worst season ever.
Pick: ALABAMA

WASHINGTON ST. (4-1) @ ARIZONA (3-2) -3

Two teams that symbolize the Pac-10's pre-eminence. State has already eclipsed its '87 win total. Cougars running back Steve Broussard and quarterback Timm Rosenbach are the most prolific ground-air duo in the conference. Rosenbach beat Troy Aikman to the 1000 yard passing plateau. Both Arizona losses have been to top-ten teams. The Cats had a bye to prepare.
Pick: WASHINGTON ST.

MICHIGAN (3-2) -6 @ IOWA (3-2-1)

Both are still in the thick of a yawn-inspiring Big-10 race. Michigan's Mike Taylor has a little more field presence than Demetrius Brown but, like the latter, can't throw a lick. Tony Boles, though no Jamie Morris, has been a pleasant addition at tailback. The Wolverines are physical on both sides of the ball but lack Iowa's big-strike capability. Hawkeye quarterback Chuck Hartleib was in top form last week with 297 yards, but had zero touchdowns against two interceptions. Both teams were the pre-season No. 1 of a major sports publication, proving how little media types really know.
Pick: IOWA

UCLA (5-0) -20 @ CAL (3-2)

Yup, Stanford is the only Pac-10 team with a losing record. Cal was blistered by Washington State last week despite 30 first downs and over nine more minutes of possession. But they did give up nearly 600 yards of offense. Aikman is throwing a touchdown every nine attempts. Bruins, who failed to cover this game last year, get a tacit bye.
Pick: UCLA

By virtue of a 2-3 record, Ohio State coach John Cooper is already on the hot seat. Winless in the Big 10, Coop has been besieged with hate mail. Miss the Pac-10 yet, big g[illegible]

Athletics. For this reason, women's soccer is not considered a varsity sport.

"I met with the girls and told them my philosophy," Ghotbi said. "They gave me a one week trial period to see how it worked out." It obviously worked out well, as the Bruins ended the season that year with a 19-0-2 record and took the league title for the first time.

In 1985, Ghotbi found himself playing for the men's soccer team and coaching the women's soccer team at the same time. While trying to complete his final year of college, the need to set his priorities straight became important. He gave himself one month to see which activity—coaching, playing, or studying—would take priority.

"I decided that I could make more of an impact as a coach than as a player," he said. And so the women's soccer team had a solid acquisition in Ghotbi.

Two more pieces of luck were added to that 1985 women's squad: defender Mary Haupt and midfielder Kristen Loskutoff. And for the second time, the Bruins were named league champs.

Currently holding a 88-12-7 career record, Ghotbi, Fontana and England will come upon their 100th win if the Bruins win all nine remaining league games as well as two playoff contests.

The Bruins are undefeated this year so far with a 4-0-1 record. Goalkeeper Donna Morris hasn't had any shots go past her this season, whereas the Bruins have scored 70 goals.

They might find some rocky roads in their quest, however. There are still two remaining California State Northridge games left in their schedule. The Bruins tied the Matadors last year in the end of the league tournament, 3-3, and consequently came in second place in the tourney.

In addition, the Bruins always seem to have trouble taming the Cal Poly San Luis Obispo Mustangs, UCLA's other tough competition. The Bruins lost to the Mustangs last year in the league tourney, 2-0, and tied them last weekend in a scoreless duel.

The Bruins are fired up for this weekend's two games, as they are both revenge matches from last season. Saturday, they will go up against San Diego State, which beat them in a controversial 1-0 loss. The game will be on the UCLA North Athletic Field at 2 p.m.

Ghotbi eyes soccer win number 100

By Wendy Witherspoon,
Staff Writer

UCLA women's soccer coach Afshin Ghotbi hopes to win his 100th career game this season with the Bruins.

For the past five years the Bruins have taken the league title of the California Collegiate Women's Soccer Conference. Coincidentally, it was also five years ago that Ghotbi became the Bruin coach.

Two contributing factors to the continued success are fifth-year seniors Pam England and Kris Fontana. These two veterans, along with Ghotbi, have been the backbone of the five-time defending league champions.

"A good coach is a motivator," said Ghotbi.

A graduate of UCLA in 1985, Ghotbi played for the UCLA men's soccer team off and on while he was a student. Frustrated because of short playing time, he turned to other mediums to satisfy his love for soccer.

In 1984, while still a student and playing for Audobon, a nearby semi-pro team, Ghotbi heard about an opening for the position as women's soccer coach.

Women's soccer is officially considered a club sport at UCLA, and as such it is under the dominion of the University Recreation Association and not the Department of Intercollegiate

Cheaters never prosper, Jay

Oh Yeah

Todd Williams

First things first—Jay Howell cheated.

He didn't bend the rules unintentionally or try to do something without gaining an advantage. He used an illegal foreign substance, pine tar, on the mound. He didn't just sort of cheat, he cheated.

Ever since Howell's expulsion from Saturday's moist game in New York, the Dodgers and numerous others (including ABC's color commentator Jim Palmer) have come to his defense. So far, I have not heard a convincing reason why Howell shouldn't have been booted from the game and subsequently suspended. Even National League President A. Bartlett Giamatti decided he was too hard on poor Jay and reduced his suspension from three to two days.

The first and lamest argument came from Howell himself. The pitcher, who admitted that his act was illegal (thanks Jay), claimed that he was only using the pine tar to get a better grip on the ball, not to alter its motion like scuffing or Vaseline. Instead of using the rosin bag provided, he simply chose to use something more to his own liking, so he smeared a bunch of pine tar on his glove. The ball still did not move unusually, he claimed, and no advantage was gained over the hitters. He also said that prohibiting foreign substances such as pine tar was a bad rule.

Wait a second, is he kidding? Did he just want to get a better grip? If by using the pine tar he was able to grip the ball better in the wet weather, than he was obviously gaining an advantage over the hitters as well as the other pitchers.

Also, the claim that pine tar does not change the flight of the ball is still being debated. Anyone who has ever touched pine tar realizes that it stays on whatever it touches. Just take a look at Howell's hat if you got any video tape of him in games 1-3. The brim of his hat is brown at the tip where he wiped off the excess tar before pitching. This alone shows that Howell was using it before the rainy Saturday in New York.

Obviously, if the grip is better he will have improved control and possibly more velocity on his pitches, thereby giving him an edge. Howell's nervous and somewhat evasive reaction when approached on the mound confirms that he knew he was breaking the rules, and whether he accepts it or not he was breaking a rule in order to help his team win the game and advance to the World Series.

The second argument is not so much that Howell should not have been ejected from game three but that his suspension was too severe. Some, like Palmer, pointed out that a three-game suspension during a possible seven game playoff was proportionally longer than the normal 10-day suspension for a similar offense during the regular season. Again, this makes no sense, since the penalty should be greater considering the circumstances.

Howell broke a rule during a playoff game, not during some insignificant regular season contest. His action, if undetected, may have given the Dodgers a victory which they did not deserve. With so much riding on every play in a league championship series, the penalty should be harsh for rule violators. The Dodgers most likely knew what Howell was doing, and therefore the pitcher should have lost his services for more than just one game.

Fortunately, Howell's loose interpretation of the rules appears not to have altered the final outcome of the series, but usually these things tend to stick (no pun intended) on one's reputation long after the penalty is served. Howell will pay the heaviest price by suffering the taunts of unforgiving fans who will regard the big righthander's name a synonym for cheater.

Thomas considers football

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

UCLA track and field star Henry Thomas has expressed an interest and most likely will join the Bruin football squad, it was learned this week.

Thomas, a 6-2, 170 pound senior in terms of track eligibility, reportedly made his first contacts with the football program a few weeks ago. He then reported to practice on Monday, and was dressed out in pads on Tuesday for half the session.

His participation since Tuesday has been limited by NCAA regulations, which mandate that a football player may not be on a scholarship in any other sport. Since Thomas is a scholarship recei-

Cornish a center of attention

Gregarious junior leads the Bruin line

By Matt Goldstein
Staff Writer

UCLA's junior center Frank Cornish holds that "people have to be self-motivated in the game of football."

Should the Bruins at some point appear unable to motivate themselves, however, it seems that the 6-4½, 265-pound junior from Chicago would be perfectly qualified to fire them up.

After all, it was F.E. Cornish who peeled his shoulder pads and led UCLA players and fans in a wild, celebratory dance immediately following the Bruins' 41-28 drubbing of Nebraska. Moreover, if one were to take in a practice over at Spaulding Field, one would see Cornish lead the team in a morale-building call-and-response drill, in which Frank plays a good-spirited drill instructor to the team's eager recruits.

But when the 21-year-old Cornish is asked about how he prepares the team psychologically for a game, he modestly asserts, "I don't think one person can do that by himself."

For a man who has a reputation as a team leader and a football funnyman, positions typically filled by loudmouths with mammoth egos, Cornish is surprisingly soft-spoken and humble. Indeed, it is no minor shock to the sensibilities to find a lineman (and a center, no less) who is not only personable, but a man quick to downplay his own role.

"I try to lead by example," Cornish says, emphasizing the word "try." "I try to play my best game, and hopefully everyone else will play their best game."

Although Cornish is reluctant to acknowledge the influence he has on the team as one of its principal motivators (he flatly states that he "can't do it for everyone"), he does not hesitate to talk about his career aspirations. While he would like to follow in his father's ursine footsteps and play professional football in his sweet home Chicago, Cornish accepts the fact that getting to Soldier Field is not always as easy as a ride

Horn honored for long career

Debate alters football, Donahue on Wills

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

In the annals of UCLA coaching, there have been some mainstays.

Basketball's John Wooden and volleyball's Al Scates immediately come to mind. But all too often, another long-time Bruin mentor has been overlooked. That man is water polo head coach Bob Horn, who is in his 26th season at UCLA.

And even fewer know that Horn was a water polo star at Cal State-Long Beach and an Olympian to boot.

Horn's accomplishments were recognized by his alma mater, though, as he was recently inducted into the Cal State Long Beach Hall of Fame—commemorating his years of support, not only to CSULB, but to the sport of water polo in general.

Before going to Long Beach in 1957, Horn had already established himself as one of the top goalies in the nation. In 1956, he represented the U.S. at the Melbourne Olympics, where his team placed fifth. In 1955, '56, '57, and '60, Horn was selected as an AAU All-American and was in the 1955 Pan Am games in Mexico City.

On the Beat: A UCLA Notebook

Upon his arrival at CSULB, Horn immediately starred for the 49ers and was voted Most Valuable Long Beach Athlete and All-American. In his first assignment as a coach in 1959—a year before he graduated—Horn led the 49ers to their first state championship. Horn ended his playing career in the 1960 Rome Olympics. In '63 Horn earned his Master's Degree in Physical Education from Long Beach.

Bob Horn began coaching the Bruins in 1963 and has since led them to 12 conference championships and three NCAA titles. His record overall is 438-164-8 (.728), and currently his squad is 18-1 and looking for a fourth national title.

Horn, who also coached the UCLA swim team from 1963-74, was selected water polo coach of the year in 1965, and in 1976 was inducted into the U.S. Water Polo Hall of Fame.

Casting their vote: Because of the security for the upcoming presidential debate, UCLA football coaches were ordered to move out of their offices in the locker room on Monday. Another inconvenience is that players will have to walk around the block to get on the practice field today.

A little history: Before Saturday's loss to USC, the 16-0 start by the water polo team was its best since 1969 when UCLA went 19-0 for the year and won its first NCAA Championship.

First, there was the 'just say no' defense—and it worked pretty well.

Two shutouts last weekend, two important wins, and a new positive attitude on the men's soccer squad.

When the Bruins host Loyola Marymount today at 3:00 on the North Athletic Field, they will have an addition to their defense. Exactly, the 'just say yes' offense.'

It hasn't made its way into a game yet, but it sure has brought new life to the UCLA practice sessions.

"I look forward to going to practice now," began UCLA goalkeeper Anton Nistl. "The forwards keep trying to put the ball past me, and when they do it kind of gets rubbed in with this 'just say yes' thing. It makes me work harder to stop them, and they work harder to get the ball into the net."

Now, Nistl for one should know the positive benefits of this new attitude. The two shutouts lowered his seasonal goals against average to 0.92, a far

Bush, Dukakis clash in Pauley debate

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

Presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis shared painful memories and emphasized hope for America's future last night during the final debate of the 1988 campaign.

The Republican and Democratic nominees addressed a myriad of subjects at UCLA's Pauley Pavilion, ranging from their positions on abortion and today's American heroes, to the future of Social Security and plans to balance the federal budget deficit.

"We (the Democrats) will set as our goal a steady, gradual reduction (of the deficit) which will require tough choices on spending," Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis said. "It will require us to go out and collect billions in taxes that aren't being paid in this country."

Vice President George Bush countered, saying he hopes Dukakis will join him "in appealing to the American people for the balanced budget amendment" to the Constitution.

"This idea of unleashing a conventional force of IRS agents into everybody's kitchen (to collect unpaid taxes and help balance the budget) — I'm against that, I oppose that," Bush said.

As at the first debate, the candidates disagreed on the issue of preserving Social Security, with Bush promising to "keep the Social Security trust fund sound and keep our commitment to the elderly."

However, Dukakis insisted "there is no way you (Bush) can finance what you want to spend . . . and buy all those weapon systems you want to buy, unless you raid the Social Security trust fund."

Bush was asked by panelist Ann Compton of ABC News whether his pledge for no new taxes was misleading because some federal taxes have been raised every year for the past five years.

"No," the Vice President answered. "Some taxes have gone up, but the main point is, taxes have been cut, and yet income to the federal government is up by 25 percent in the last three years."

"What I want to do is keep this expansion going . . . and the way you kill expansions is to raise taxes, and I don't want to do that."

Bush emphasized his commitment to a "flexible freeze" which would allow growth but would "not permit the Congress just to add on spending," he said.

Dukakis, however, charged Bush with changing his mind about a tax increase and referred to one critic who called the "flexible freeze" an "economic slurpee."

Debate does little to alter opinions

By Ron Bell and Marlene Casillas
Staff Writers

It was billed as the final conflict between two men, two futures and two ideologies, but students here described the presidential debate with another phrase: too boring.

From the fraternities to the sororities, to the residence halls and the Cooperage, a team of 14 Bruin reporters learned that viewers found George Bush and Michael Dukakis repetitive and evasive. Some students said the format of the debate — in which candidates did not directly question each other — made listening dull. Many chose not to listen at all.

One Bruin reporter visited eight fraternities, but found no one watching at any. Another reporter, at Baxter's Bar and Grill in Westwood, met a campus engineer who said he'd "rather be watching baseball." And a third reporter, at Alpha Chi Omega sorority, spoke with a senior who noted that, "Nothing major happened. There were no big changes on either side to sway me."

Overall, students said, they were not persuaded to change their votes. Republicans remained Bush supporters, while Democrats backed Dukakis. Each party claimed victory for its favorite.

Partisans of both stripes agreed that Bush appeared more relaxed, aggressive and coherent than in his Oct. 25 debate with Dukakis. Indeed, the candidate seemed to take the offensive almost from the first question by repeatedly branding Dukakis "out-of-step" with most Americans.

"George Bush was a lot more prepared," said Naomi Sachs, a senior who watched the debate at Alpha Chi Omega. "Last time, he was just 'God Bless America.' "

"He looked more confident," agreed senior Everard Esteban at the Cooperage. "He was more specific on the issues and didn't look as nervous this time around."

Groups protest outside Pavilion

By Lisa Luboff, Contributor

"We want to know" was painted on the banner being held by CalPIRG members while music from the rock band Thelonious Monster blared through the air to a crowd of approximately 300 students in Westwood Plaza yesterday at noon.

"We just want some answers to the questions of the debate and why some students weren't invited . . . we are particularly interested in the environment," said Mike Levin, one of the students holding the banner.

Kirsten Price, an undeclared sophomore and member of CalPIRG, emphasized, "This protest is a non-partisan protest." She said that the goal was to make students aware that national issues are not truly addressed in the debate, "and that we really do care."

In the midst of the huge crowd however, the sign was barely visible from any more than thirty feet from it's position.

"No, I don't know why that sign is here, I didn't even look at it, what does it say?" asked Scott Sowle, a senior psychology student.

Christine Harbs, a senior CalPIRG member expressed her hope at the beginning of the concert

DEBATE'88 UCLA

Debate ends in draw, according to experts

By Irena Auerbuch
Staff Writer

Yesterday's presidential debate was a draw, according to most members of the press and UCLA political and media experts.

The process by which this decision was reached involves such behind-the-scenes factors as extensive communication among the press and what Shanto Iyengar, a UCLA associate political science professor, called "media hype."

He explained that the media had built up expectations that "Dukakis needed to score a knock out (in the debate), while it was not realistic to expect a candidate to pull a trick out of a hat."

And much of the debate's attention focused on Dukakis' performance.

UCLA Speech Coach Tom Miller thought that "both candidates performed adequately. Bush was better than he had ever been. If I were his professor I would be proud of his growth; George Bush has grown as a communicator. As far as media expectations went, he did smashingly."

As for the Democratic contender's performance in the debate, Miller commented that "Dukakis won the abortion issue cold . . . women will vote for Dukakis because of his enlightened view of abortion. Unfortunately, that was about all he won.

"Dukakis has a sharp, intelligent, fine mind, but he never figured out how to communicate with everyone," Miller continued. "He can't talk the common language . . . he can't inspire people to follow him. Americans tend to be suspicious of people who don't show emotion."

Miller also expressed criticism about media handling of presidential debates.

"They seem to be very win-oriented. They seem to be hell-bent on creating a consensus that someone has won. They go on gaffe hunts and then blow up a mistake beyond all proportion," he said.

"Gerald Ford lost an election as a result of one sentence (because of the media)," Miller added.

"Reporters often take expectations into a debate. More than that, they try to get an agreement among themselves. They don't want to miss a story that everyone else will have," said John Zaller, assistant professor of political science.

This is why the media tries to reach a consensus very early in the debate, Zaller explained.

The consensus in the Ackerman Grand Ballroom media center seemed to be that the debate was "pretty boring," according to U.S. News and World Report correspondent Andy Platter. "Most people felt that it was a very close debate, that Dukakis had to win by a substantial margin and he didn't," he added.

Communication studies Lecturer Jeffrey Cole disagreed. "I thought it was one of the most impressive debates I have ever seen," he said, referring to the exchange of ideas that was developing between Bush and Dukakis.

"I think Dukakis clearly showed himself to be an equal to Bush. He showed himself to be a man of stature and distinction . . . however, Bush may have won given his lead in the polls; Dukakis needed something dramatic to win," Cole said.

"I thought Dukakis missed a couple of wonderful opportunities," he added.

According to a Cable Network News (CNN) reporter, "Dukakis didn't communicate with the American people. He spent more time jabbing at Bush. There were a lot of missed opportunities here; no Iran-Contra, no drugs."

Iyengar opined that the media "will not make anything out of the debate because there was nothing out of the ordinary. I would say it was a draw . . . a hum-drum, low-key affair. It will disappear from the media's agenda very quickly."

Zaller agreed that "(The candidates) came out even, which the press finds boring."

Gene Randall of CNN commented, "You could tell by the hum level in the room (the media center, which held 600 to 800 people) that less and less attention was paid to the debate; it was getting louder and louder."

One of the expectations carried into the debate seemed to be "Dukakis' warmth and humanity issue," according to Iyengar.

Zaller explained that the media came to a consensus very early in the debate that Dukakis had failed to dispel the impression of himself as a passionless technocrat.

Several reporters in the media center seemed to think that Dukakis did not react emotionally enough to the first question of the debate about what he would do if his wife were raped and murdered.

"He lost the election when he was not even able to respond emotionally to that first question," said one reporter.

"You've got to be emotional about an answer like that," added a television writer from Boston.

"The press heard the answer and strengthened an already-formed consensus," Zaller explained.

"Dukakis was simply unnerved by that first question and never recovered while Bush was relaxed and came across as your next-door neighbor," commented reporter Anne Groer of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. Groer was one of the panelists at the first presidential debate at Wake Forest University.

The press feels compelled to agree because no one wants to "go out on a limb," Zaller observed. "Balance is an important norm. You have to minimize the number of chances you take. You're exposed. You're going to put your name on an article."

Presidential hopefules George Bush and Michael Dukakis exchange an handshake afater their 90-minute face-off. Several UCLA political experts and students declared the match a draw.

DEBATE: Bush, Dukakis' last clash

long after the president leaves office, Compton said.

Bush vowed he would appoint judges who would not "legislate from the bench, (but) will interpret the Constitution. I do not want to see us go to again a liberal majority. . . ." The Vice President endorsed the Supreme Court nominations President Reagan has made during his office, calling them "outstanding."

Dukakis responded by exclaiming, "If the Vice President thinks Robert Bork was a good appointment, that's a very good reason for voting for Mike Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen. . . ."

Dukakis was told by Compton that although he had won the first debate on an intellectual scale, the public had not been particularly fond of him.

The Governor, assessing the importance of a president's likability, maintained "I'm a reasonably likable guy. But I'm also a serious guy. I think the presidency of the United States is a serious office. I hope and expect that I'll be liked by the people, but I also think it's important to be somebody who's willing to make those tough choices."

Bush answered Dukakis by insisting, "It's not a question of whether the people like you or not. I think it's whether you share the broad dreams of the American people, whether you have confidence in people's ability to get things done."

The candidates became highly personal during discussion of the abortion issue, a subject on which the two men have differed decisively.

Bush, who would allow abortions in the case of rape, incest or threat to a mother's life, shared his and his wife Barbara's experience when they lost a child after just six months.

"If that child were here today," Bush said, "that child could stay alive for 10 or 15 years or maybe for the rest of her life. I don't think you make an exception based on medical knowledge of the time . . . I don't assail him (Dukakis) on that issue or others on that issue. That's the way I, George Bush, feel."

The Dukakises had a similar experience and lost a child, but Dukakis said, "The real question we have to answer is not how many exceptions we have to make . . . (but) who makes this very difficult decision."

When asked to cite examples of American role models, Dukakis looked at many sectors of American society to find heroes for America's youth. He pointed to the Olympic athletes, doctors and scientists, classroom teachers, clergy members, "drug counselors who are doing heroic work and law enforcement officials who take their lives into their own hands every day."

Bush acknowledged the space shuttle astronauts and paid homage to President Ronald Reagan, "who is leaving office with his popularity at an all-time high" as a true hero for today's young people.

As expected, the candidates clashed on the credibility of Republican Vice Presidential nominee Dan Quayle. Bush supported his selection for the office, and condemned the criticism Quayle has received. Dukakis meanwhile emphasized the selection of a Vice Presidential candidate as an indication of the kind of people the president would appoint after his election.

Dukakis may have worn fake emblem

By Richard Hopkins, Staff Writer

When Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis was photographed throwing a baseball at the Bonaventure Hotel last Wednesday, he was wearing what appeared to be a sweatshirt with a presently unlicensed UCLA logo.

ASUCLA Licensing Administrator Jack Revoyr said Dukakis' sweatshirt features a UCLA seal that was used three years ago, but is no longer allowed to be used as a UCLA logo.

Revoyr said that in an effort to identify unlicensed uses of the UCLA logo, his office changed the official seal.

The sweatshirt, if printed within the last three years, was made without the permission of the ASUCLA licensing office and would be in violation of trademark regulations, based on information received from Revoyr.

ASUCLA holds the rights to everything printed with the UCLA seal.

Dukakis press secretary Mark Gearan did not know at press time where or when the candidate got the sweatshirt but said "I assume that this (the sweatshirt) is usually something that is given to (Dukakis)."

Gearan said Dukakis "usually handles his own wardrobe."

Revoyr said he does "not permit anyone to use this design."

He also added that the color combination "I saw on television (with Dukakis wearing the sweatshirt) was strange."

According to Revoyr, the seal printed on Dukakis' sweatshirt has a border that features "little scoop marks."

The new official seal is bordered with ring of small dots.

"I told all our licensees that this is the only seal you may use...," Revoyr said.

Revoyr added that he was pleased that Dukakis was wearing a UCLA sweatshirt, but he "wished he bought it from the student store."

Gearan mentioned that Dukakis "would love to wear an official UCLA sweatshirt."

A picture was printed in the Oct. 13 Los Angeles Times which shows Dukakis wearing the sweatshirt.

DEBATE'88 UCLA

Debate Analysis

Debate fails to inform

By Kenneth Kecskes
Asst. Viewpoint Editor

If voters hoped that last night's presidential debate would clear up a campaign based on sensationalism, last night's debate may be as close as they'll get to the issues. Republican presidential nominee Vice President George Bush and Democratic Nominee Governor Michael S. Dukakis faced off in Pauley Pavilion last night in the last presidential debate. Each had target voters they had to reach. Dukakis had to reach out to the elderly and blue-collar Reagan Democrats. Bush had to aim at Middle Americans and assure them they wouldn't be squeezed by the economy. Each succeeded in reaching their targets, but both Bush and Dukakis had trouble with some of the issues.

The evening had its ups and downs for Dukakis. He failed to melt the "iceman image," and the governor could not dodge Bush's attacks on him as a "liberal." Dukakis appeared more reasoned and collected than Bush, but he lacked the attack strategy he had during first debate. The governor scored on such issues as the environment, social security and abortion.

Bush appeared confident and in control during the entire entire event. Warm and personal, Bush was a stark contrast to the cool, stoic Dukakis. Bush continued to dominate foreign policy questions. He attacked Dukakis' idea of trimming the deficit through increased tax collections and reassured us that the American economy will continue to expand if he is elected president. Bush lost ground with women and the poor; he did not successfully answer questions about entitlements for the poor and abortion.

As expected, Bush's running mate choice continued to haunt the vice president. But Bush defended his selection, saying his decision represents his faith in the baby boom generation. Dukakis admonished Bush for his choice, charging that the decision displayed a lack of judgment.

Much of the debate discussed economic policy. Bush refused to define his "flexible freeze" economic policy, allowing Dukakis to successfully dub it an "economic slurpee" that would lead to cuts in Social Security and Medicaid. He scored points by pushing the image of a George Bush who is out for tax breaks for the rich, a charge Bush never responded to with success. However, Bush easily rejected Dukakis' plan to reduce the national debt, which is now $1.5 trillion. "This whole idea of unleashing an army of IRS agents into everybody's kitchen . . . I'm against that," Bush said.

Social Security was mentioned often. Dukakis argued that Bush would slice Social Security for the sake of military and social spending. He attacked George Bush for voting against Social Security five times, in 1981, '82, and '85.

Reagan record scored points with students who admire the nation's economic growth and increased military readiness, while his economic policies seemed more realistic to many. As a person, students said, he appeared more "presidential" than the dour-faced Dukakis.

But Bush's defense of Dan Quayle and opposition to abortion displeased a number of students. Kristan Brunson, a sophomore biology major, said he was "very much against Bush because he is anti-abortion" and "(wraps) himself in the American flag too much."

Dukakis, by contrast, earned credits for his pro-choice stand on abortion. Students also characterized him as more conscious of issues that affect middle America. Kathy Katsura said she liked his broad domestic policies, especially those which favor universal health care, family care and programs for working mothers.

In general, Lloyd Bentsen, Dukakis' choice of running mate, earned higher ratings than Quayle, who is running with Bush. However, few people said the vice presidential candidates will ultimately affect the electorate's decision.

And they doubted that last night's debate would change their minds, either. Although students in the Cooperative listened raptly to the debaters' duel, students elsewhere said poor questions by the debate's panel of professional journalists were to blame for a lackluster evening.

"I was really disappointed because I thought the three women (panelists) had a chance to ask new questions (about the Equal Rights Amendment, in particular) but they just repeated the first debate," said Dawnielle Materre, a Bruin Belle.

Because they felt they learned little new from last night's confrontation, nonpartisan students said the election offers no real choices. "I'm voting for the lesser of two evils," said junior Thomas Graver.

And who is that?

"I haven't decided yet."

Commentary

'A plague on both their houses'

By Whitney Woodward, Staff Writer

I wasn't invited to Madonna's wedding, either, but somehow the helicopters' whirling egg-beater blades over my 10 o'clock poetry class yesterday were just as intrusive. It's as if the sanctity of our school was somehow violated by the Great Debate.

Last night we were all "just a heartbeat," 47 miles of cables, several CIA "stinger missles" (protective devices capable of destroying small countries that were sitting on top of Pauley) and 1,900 spectators away from the future president of the United States. Everyone thought it was like a big party they wanted to be invited to (we supply the whine, the candidates supply the cheese . . .) but they were just two men in a gym, cut off from the very public they were trying to reach. It was so predictable that the Associated Press wire service had a story out — written in the past tense — at 1:30 yesterday afternoon.

A lot of students were feeling frustrated because this is a public institution, and yesterday elitist boundaries were clearly defined. Many felt that they would've been a much more polite audience than that raucous, partisan crowd there last night. But admit it, Bruins — it was not much more exciting than the Wake (me-up-when-yer-done) Forest Chapel debate.

What exactly did we learn? That George Bush wants to express his love for water and that Dukakis "wants the nation to move forward?" Who doesn't? While the candidates repeatedly tried to delineate themselves from each other, their viewpoints seemed fairly generic.

How could it be interesting? The United States has never had a real ideological conflict, my poli sci professor tells me, because everyone tries so hard to be middle class.

"Where else would you find a millionaire trying to pretend he's a redneck?" he asked our class. This was the same day that Quayle was quoted as saying, "He (Dukakis) thinks he's better than us!" in Ohio while holding a pumpkin to his shoulder. Can we say "photo-opportunity?" Dukakis was televised the day the Dodgers kicked the Mets in a UCLA sweatshirt throwing a baseball in front of the Bonaventure Hotel. (This "photo opp" has an interesting twist; see the story on the next page.")

These candidates tried to please and appease us, but it was all so contrived. Dukakis wanted to appear "a lot more loyable" but he was querulous and snappy, often interrupting his female questioners to correct them. He certainly did not come off as the "guy you'd want to invite to your barbeque" as his advisors had hoped. Bush, on the other hand, was too suave for words, so cool and calm you'd swear he was on Valium. "Bernie," he intimately addressed the moderator, (nod, wink) "I hope you'll add five seconds for that," when someone in the crowd booed him.

Honestly, if the American people were faithfully represented in this debate we'd have Geraldo R., Phil D. and Oprah W. as panelists and Dr. Ruth as a "spin doctor" (only this campaigning has been so dirty she'd have to put it through the 'Heavy Load' twice before spinning.)

I've been apathetic about politics for a long time, but it's a cultivated apathy. There's a difference between stupid apathy and belligerent apathy. An example: This summer I was at a barbeque and witnessed a stupid apathetic outlining his voting strategy: "Either I vote for whoever's ahead in the polls" (which is kind of funny at this point because according to the latest CNN poll Bentsen is ahead of Dukakis) or, he said, smirking, "I vote exactly the opposite of my sister. I want her to know that no matter what she decides to support, my vote will discount it."

That's stupid voting. In fact, that's sadistic voting. That's not even refusing to vote to fling an insult at the establishment.

My friend Larry is an example of belligerent apathy. "I'm going to vote for Bush so that Dukakis won't get blamed for this quagmire the Republicans have been creating," he told me. Reactionary, yes, but at least he's utilizing his option to criticize the political process.

Sometimes people come up with their own solutions. When I was on the bus a guy identifying himself as Drew Angel asked me if I were an "activist," simply because I was reading a bunch of papers. He handed me some old election material, telling me that he had run for president in the primaries. His flyer read:

"WE NEED DECADE-SIZED PROJECTS FOR AMERICA. WE NEED TO BUILD A SPACE FLEET OF A 1,000 SPACE-SHUTTLE SHIPS, FACTORY SHIPS, LABORATORY SHIPS, ETC. WE NEED TO RETURN TO THE MOON; AND WE CAN EXPECT HUNDREDS OF JOBS TO BE FOUND THERE, CREATING MILLIONS HERE. WE NEED TO REBUILD OUR MERCHANT MARINE FLEET, AND WE NEED TO BUILD A CANAL ACROSS NICARAGUA TO IMPROVE OUR WORLD TRADE..." at the very end of this tirade he men tioned something about paying the national debt.

Some people let politics run their lives. I guess some people need that diversion. Think of all of the campaigners, for example — what will they do for the next two years before it's time to gear up for another election?

At the last minute I got a chance to get into Pauley P. but decided to watch the debate on television instead. The media section is miles back from the podium and I didn't want to miss George Bush's ghostly, fluttering white hands or that charming way he has of jiggling his neck flab (he must've picked this up from Reagan.) And who could guarantee that I'd be able to hear Dukakis use his two favorite words: "deeply" and "youngster" and see his traditional 14 eye blinks before answering each question?

All of my expectations were fulfilled. After the debating hour last night I thought I saw a "thousand points" of like...life, I mean lights, but it was just the television cameras pin-pointing UCLA with their glare. Maybe Drew Angel is right. Maybe our future is all up there in the stars.

Ex-UCLA worker admits to burglary

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

A Culver City man faces up to three years in state prison for stealing a computer from his former employer, the UCLA Medical Center.

David Lee Duncan, 28, will be sentenced Nov. 3 in Los Angeles County Superior Court for grand theft, a charge linked to a computer burglary that occurred at the Brain Research Institute last month.

Duncan pleaded guilty to the felony charge Thursday at his arraignment in the Santa Monica courthouse.

The charge stems from a Sept. 9 burglary at a BRI laboratory, in which a $3,000 MacIntosh computer system was stolen. Campus police arrested Duncan and recovered the computer Sept. 11, said UCPD Sgt. Al Brown.

From 1980 to 1987, Duncan worked for the Medical Center in the crafts and alterations department, according to UCLA personnel verification services.

At his arraignment Thursday, Duncan faced three felony charges: burglary, receiving stolen property, and grand theft. But in a plea bargain arrangement, Duncan pleaded guilty only to the third charge, Deputy District Attorney Thomas Sokolov said.

Duncan's sentencing will take place Nov. 3 at the county superior court, West B. Pending his sentence, Duncan will be remanded without bail, according to the court clerk.

Student identified in Hedrick Hall suicide

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

A UCLA student who fell to her death from the top floor of Hedrick Hall Wednesday evening was identified yesterday as 18-year-old Dahlia Lebovitz, according to officials from the Los Angeles County Coroner.

Initial reports list Lebovitz's death as a suicide, said Pat Smith, a county coroner public information officer.

The student's father has been notified, Smith said.

Lebovitz jumped from a window on the northeast corner of Hedrick's seventh floor Wednesday. According to UC Police Department Sgt. Kathy Stanley, officers at the scene were unable to persuade her to step down from the windowsill, where she sat with her legs dangling outside.

Hedrick Hall employees notified police at 10:08 p.m., and UCPD arrived three minutes later. At 10:16 p.m., police officers below saw Lebovitz jump from the window and hit the ground feet first.

The student died at the UCLA Medical Center at 10:57 p.m.

Heart-lung transplant recipient begins anew

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor

For Monica Fasogni, a fatal act of violence resulted in a new beginning for herself, her husband and their two daughters.

Fasogni became Southern California's first heart-lung transplant patient after a five and a half hour operation at the UCLA Medical Center on Aug. 27 in which she received the heart and lungs of a donor who died from gunshot wounds.

The 27-year-old woman was released yesterday after recovering for six weeks from a procedure designed to help patients suffering from a condition known as primary pulmonary hypertension.

This condition is most common in women ages 20 to 40 and is caused by a build-up of abnormal pressure in the blood vessels of the lungs. The pressure in turn damages the heart, leading to a condition that is nearly always fatal.

"We felt that her prognosis for survival was nearly zero without the surgery," said Dr. Michael Levine, assistant professor of pulmonary medicine at the UCLA School of Medicine. He estimated that patients who receive the procedure have a 50 percent survival rate after one year.

While Levine was not directly involved in the surgery, he played a part in determining if the operation would be able to help Fasogni.

"It began with a long and arduous screening process to find out who would most benefit from the procedure," he explained.

After being singled out as an organ recipient, Fasogni had to carry a beeper with her so that she could be contacted immediately if a donor became available. But the beeper was not necessary when the time came.

"The beeper never really went off," said Fasogni. "I got a phone call in the middle of the night and I was a bit shaky."

While she may have had reservations about the procedure, Fasogni decided that given her prognosis, she had nothing to lose.

"I figured I had to get the transplant. I had to get through it for my children," she explained quietly.

One thing that enabled Fasogni to be more comfortable with the procedure was a visit with a patient who had received a heart-lung transplant at Stanford. The visit was arranged by Lisa Leonard, a registered nurse and heart-lung transplant coordinator.

"It's always nice to see someone who has been through it and been through it well," said Leonard.

In addition to this visit, Fasogni was also aided by the support of her family, said Dr. Hillel Laks, heart-lung transplant program director at UCLA. "Monica did go through a very difficult period . . . and her

Egyptian awarded 1988 Nobel literature prize

By Larry Gerber
Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Naguib Mahfouz of Egypt, an Arab storyteller who chronicled the search for human values from the Nile delta of the Pharaohs to the back alleys of modern Cairo, won the 1988 Nobel Prize for literature Thursday.

Mahfouz, the first Arab writer to win the award in its 87-year history, has been compared to Charles Dickens for his vivid portrayals of poverty.

One book of his was banned in Egypt, and another attacked former President Gamal Abdel Nasser's domestic and pan-Arabist policies.

The Swedish Academy honored him for advancing the art of the novel, a relatively new genre in Arabic literature.

"His work speaks to us all," the academy said.

Mahfouz, 76, was awakened from an afternoon nap at his Cairo home and told the news. He said he was "very happy and thankful for the Arab world" and added:

"I congratulate the Egyptian people that one of its small people won a big award, (but) it's not too big for Egypt. I hope this will be the first step for our literary generations. We have taken a lot and must now give."

The award continued a recent trend in the 18-member body to seek laureates outside the mainstream of European and American literature.

Wole Soyinka of Nigeria won in 1986. Exiled Russian poet Joseph Brodsky won last year.

Mahfouz, the son of a Cairo civil servant, has shown little admiration for contemporary Arab writers, including himself.

Once asked to appraise his work, he said: "Probably like the rest of modern Arabic literature, fourth or fifth rate."

The 1988 prize is worth $390,000, but it inevitably brings a further bonus in royalties and prestige. Sigrid Kahle, a Swedish specialist in Arabic literature, said Mahfouz could probably use both.

"Still, at his age, he can't support himself as an author, and he's not lacking for enemies," she said.

North, South Korea disagree

Fifth set of talks to reunite countries ends in deadlock

By Paul Shin
Associated Press

PANMUNJOM, Korea — Officials from North and South Korea on Thursday failed to agree on measures to reunite the peninsula and ended a fifth round of talks with each side blaming the other for the deadlock.

After two hours of haggling at this truce village inside the Demilitarized Zone separating their nations, delegates agreed to meet again Nov. 17.

"The northern side took an insincere stand throughout, and there was no progress," Lee Han-dong, a South Korean delegate and parliamentarian, told a news conference after the meeting.

Chon Kum Chol, the chief North Korean negotiator, said: "The South's position was basically the same as before, and they made no concessions at all."

The two Koreas, meeting for the first time since the Olympics ended Oct. 2 in Seoul, made some changes in their positions, but neither side showed willingness to make major concessions.

Delegates first shook hands over a new conference table and exchanged small talk. Previously, the table was so wide they could not reach across for handshakes.

The cordial mood quickly dissipated as both sides exchanged testy statements, accusing each other of insincere efforts to find ways reunite the Korean Peninsula, which was divided in 1945.

Thursday's meeting, the fifth since Aug. 21, was called to prepare for proposed main talks between the Koreas' legislatures on non-aggression and other peace measures.

North Korea suggested the main talks include one-third of the lawmakers from the North, or 218 people, and half of the South's lawmakers, or 150 people. That was a change from previous meetings.

Median income in Japan more than in U.S.

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The average Japanese earned the equivalent of $23,022 last year, well above the U.S. average of $18,163 and the highest income among major industrialized nations surveyed in a study released today.

The U.S. average also was topped by the West Germans, whose income averaged the equivalent of $21,022.

When it comes to what the money will buy — in technical terms, "purchasing power parity" — the average American remained in the lead with $9,009. The West German income was calculated on this basis at an average $7,783, the Japanese at $7,302.

The study, "Japan in the World Economy," surveyed earning power in six of the major industrial nations. After the top three nations, France had a per capita income equivalent to $17,657, Italy $14,903 and the United Kingdom $13,395.

The authors call purchasing power a better measure of people's prosperity, since it takes account of the cost of food and housing, which are especially high in Japan.

For example, the price of a house or apartment in a middle class Tokyo district is said to be seven to 10 times the earnings of its owner. A small apartment an hour and a half from the central part of the city cost nearly $500,000 at the end of 1987.

Jesse Jackson

The Rev. Jesse Jackson is scheduled to appear between noon and 1 p.m. today in Westwood Plaza.

According to Albert Robles, a member of the Bruin Democrats, Jackson will give a speech, but no question-and-answer session is scheduled.

Robles said that Jackson will be encouraging students to vote in the Nov. 8 election.

On Thursday, The Center for Student Programming confirmed Jackson's scheduled appearance. However, no set agenda was available at press time.

Jackson remained in the race for the democratic party nomination until the Atlanta democratic convention, when Massachusetts governor Michael Dukakis became the official party nominee.

Jackson's visit will be organized by the Bruin Democrats and Students For Jackson.

Year-long academic program examines French Revolution

Editor's note: This is the final story in a series on UCLA's year-long academic commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution.

1789 -1989

By Marlene Casillas
Staff Writer

The nation's largest commemoration of France's 200th anniversary, "1789-1989, the French Revolution: A UCLA Bicentennial Program," has excited the French about sharing their history with Americans.

UCLA's efforts to celebrate the French revolution have strengthened international relations and will increase American understanding of the event, said Alexander Tolstoy, cultural attache of the French Embassy in Los Angeles.

UCLA's year-long academic program has attracted prominent French intellectual and cultural figures. Top French scholars, politicians and artists — financed by the French government — will participate in lectures, exhibitions, courses and cultural events at UCLA beginning in November.

"Thanks to UCLA, Los Angeles has one of the most important programs in the world," Tolstoy said.

The American Committee on the French Revolution (members include Emmanuel de Margerie, French Ambassador to the United States and Joe M. Rodgers, American Ambassador to France) emphasize the importance of celebrating the bicentennial.

"The celebration of the Bicentennial of the French Revolution provides an opportunity to better understand the shared heritage of our two countries and our shared hopes for progress and peace," de Margerie wrote in the Bicentennial of the French Revolution Newsletter.

France and the United States have been allied in their conquests for liberty and equality for more than two hundred years, said Tolstoy. France supported the colonists battle for freedom during the American revolution and revolutionary spirit swept both countries. However, two centuries of controversy about the violence of "The Terror" — public executions by the guillotine — sheds an unfavorable light on French Revolution, Tolstoy said.

"The violence contained by the French Revolution poses a problem for each man who considers the positive progress obtained by the revolution," Tolstoy said. Debates about the violence indicate that the French Revolution poses both political and moral problems, he said.

"But people must appreciate all the positive things brought on by the revolution because the negative events do not represent the essence of the revolution."

The revolution gave birth to modern France, Tolstoy said. The ideals of liberty and equality for all mankind, embodied in The Declaration of the Rights of Man and Citizen (the French equivalent to our Constitution and Bill of Rights) is what the French celebrate on Bastille Day.

Despite the intellectual controversy, the French will be celebrating France's 200th anniversary beginning Jan. 1, 1989.

"France is a synonym for Democracy," he said.

Currently, France has the most social justice in the world, Tolstoy said. Medical care is easily accessible and affordable to all citizens, he said. In addition, the social security program is considered the most effective.

Bastille Day is a festive time for French citizens, said Pierre Eid, UCLA French exchange student. An official parade with the President, prominent political and military figures marches through Paris on the morning of July 14 and citizens dance in the streets at night, Eid said.

The patriotic spirit of the day is similar to American Independence Day, but formal family meals replace casual family picnics, Eid said. An even larger celebration for the Bicentennial is planned.

Bond measure would build jails, relieve overcrowding

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — California's sheriffs can count at least 41 reasons to pass Proposition 86.

That's the number of the state's 58 counties that have overcrowded jails. Of those counties, 24 are under court orders to alleviate jail crowding, even if they have to let some criminals go free.

Proposition 86 would authorize the state to sell $500 million in general obligation bonds to finance matching grants for counties to build jails, juvenile halls and youth centers.

"Without adequate jail space, law enforcement will be hampered and your public safety could be compromised," says a ballot pamphlet argument signed by Democratic Sen. Robert Presley of Riverside, Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block and County Supervisors Association of California President Barbara Shipnuck.

"Without adequate juvenile and youth facilities, our efforts to help the troubled and needy youth of this state will be diminished," the supporters say.

Authors of a ballot pamphlet argument against Proposition 86, three Libertarian Party activists, raise concerns about the state's growing reliance on bonds. They call instead for speedier trials for accused criminals and alternatives to incarceration.

The $500 million bond measure would provide $410 million for jail construction, $65 million for juvenile halls and $2 million for youth centers or shelters.

Counties would have to pay 25 percent of jail and juvenile facility costs. They also must show they can provide adequate facilities for drunken and mentally ill inmates and have tried alternatives to jail, such as work release and weekend work programs.

Youth centers eligible for the construction grants could be run by private nonprofit agencies or local governments and range from recreation and fitness programs to delinquency prevention, counseling and job training centers. Qualifying youth shelters would be those helping homeless, abused and neglected youngsters.

The state would pay off the bonds from the general fund over a period of 20 years. An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would add $400 million to the state's bill.

In the past seven years, voters have approved a total of $1 billion in state-backed bonds for jails and juvenile halls. But all those funds have been spent.

The state Board of Corrections predicts that jails with a projected capacity of 65,000 inmates in 1990 will face a shortage of 11,500 beds The agency estimates the statewide average daily jail population will rise to 105,000 people .

Proposition 86:

Would provide $500 million for youth correctional and juvenile detention facilities, with the bulk of the funds, $410 million, going for construction, renovation and expansion of county correctional facilities.

TA charged in killing of 2 neighbors

By May Wong
Staff Writer

A bail hearing has been set for UCLA graduate student Xiaodong Bai, charged with shooting to death two neighbors Tuesday.

Bai, looking calm as he entered the courtroom, told the judge in West Los Angeles Municipal Court Thursday that he understood the charges against him. Bai's bail hearing then was set for Oct. 20 and his preliminary hearing for Oct. 28.

Bai was arrested Tuesday night, four hours after Rosa Molina, 54, and Michael Kampf, 57, were found shot to death outside his apartment building. Witnesses said Bai shot the pair and then retreated to his Federal Avenue apartment. Officers convinced him to surrender after talking with him by phone.

A third year doctoral candidate of Modern Chinese Literature, Bai was also a teaching assistant for the East Asian Languages and Cultures department.

Acknowledged as a scholar, the university admitted him with a Chancellor's Fellowship. Fellowships are awarded to qualifying students to provide financial assistance usually on an annual basis.

University administrators, as well as the staff of the East Asian Languages and Cultures department, have thus far declined to comment.

family has been very warm and caring,'' said Laks.

Laks said UCLA has now done 95 heart transplants, making it the second largest heart transplant program in California. But he added that being one of the eleven heart-lung transplant centers in the United States poses problems for UCLA transplant teams.

One dilemma is that the lungs that are transplanted must be completely infection free. Another difficulty is that the lungs must be a perfect fit for the patient, unlike heart transplant patients, who can receive a heart that is larger than their own.

Laks said this procedure was first done in 1968 but was discontinued after a short time due to its poor success rate. It was begun again in 1980 due to the presence of better immunosuppressive drugs, which help to prevent the patients body from rejecting donated organs.

He added that 150 heart-lung transplants have been performed since 1980.

that the main singer of Thelonious Monster was going speak on behalf of CalPIRG. ''He was going to say a few words for us and maybe we would go in during the middle (of the concert).''

The main singer of the band did express his opinion during the concert, but many students found it offensive and shocking.

''Any of you vote for George Bush, you die,'' said the main singer during the concert. Later though, he apologized for his statement, ''I didn't mean to say I would kill you. I'm not saying any political stuff, but just look at the man, he worked for the CIA and stuff.''

Although the singer mainly criticized George Bush, he said, ''I don't like Dukakis much either, but Bush is a frightening guy.''

In response to prodding from audience members, the singer said ''these liberal guys come up here and ask me to say this and that. What else can you say besides, 'Fuck George Bush in the butthole with a big dildo' ? ''

The singer also commented on students not being allowed into the debate, ''Why is that?'' he asked, ''maybe because they are a bunch of fascist fuckheads. No . . . they are just not very good guys.''

''I understand there is not enough room, but I think 100 to 200 students from different representative groups on campus should be allowed to go,'' said Michael Folk, a junior philosophy major, observing the concert. In response to the speakers comments Folk argued that, ''He says a lot of four letter words, which don't mean anything.''

Thelonius Monster performed a noon concert sponsored by UCLA Campus Events. According to Gregg Ambrose, Commissioner of Campus Affairs, the band offended both students and administrators.

''Their views do not coincide with the views of Campus Events or the university. People are screaming down the halls right now,'' said Ambrose.

buildings have been constructed for the commemoration. Cultural and academic programs, exhibits, and events fill France's agenda for 1989.

Hotels in Paris and the surrounding area are already booked solid, said Eid.

''I was surprised to discover the UCLA program,'' he said. ''I did not realize the impact our history had on the world.''

People who are unable to visit France in 1989 have the opportunity to enjoy the UCLA celebration.

''The program is a fantastic opportunity for people to learn more about the French Revolution and for the French and Americans to better understand each other,'' Tolstoy said.

ANALYSIS: Candidates fail to inform public social programs allowed Dukakis to score points with the elderly and the poor. Dukakis successfully painted Bush as a man who would take a red pen to Social Security, Medicaid and other forms of health care. Dukakis questioned the billions of dollars spent on ''Star Wars,'' suggesting that the money could be better used. And Dukakis made sure he couldn't be branded as a liberal who gives ''hand-outs'' via welfare. He continually referred to his plan to get people off of welfare and into the workforce.

Abortion is an tough issue for both candidates. Bush floundered on the abortion issue, claiming that unborns afflicted with disease should be allowed to live because it is possible that new medical techniques could be discovered. Dukakis, in his most emotional moment of the debate, told of how he and Kitty Dukakis lost a child twenty minutes after it was born. In strong, stern tones he asserted, ''The question goes down to this: Who makes the decision? I believe the woman should make the decision.''

Dukakis had to shed the liberal image that Bush branded him with at the Republican National Convention. Even though Dukakis shook his association with Jobs for Peace, Bush continued to attack the governor on support of unilateral cuts in the early 1980's. Bush successfully characterized the Congress as a ''liberal'' body that spends too much.

Each had target voters they had to reach. Dukakis had to reach out to the elderly and blue-collar Reagan Democrats. Bush had to aim at Middle Americans and assure them they wouldn't be squeezed by the economy.

Bush, trumpeting the foreign policy successes of the Reagan Administration, reinforced his strong lead in the subject. He asserted that world peace would be his foremost goal as President, and, drawing on his foreign policy experience, he forcefully drowned out any discussion by the governor. Bush, who often claims that he would never want to use food as a weapon, as President Jimmy Carter did, attacked the governor, claiming that Dukakis would. Dukakis shot back, however, attacking Bush for the administration's pipeline embargo.

The environment is an important issue with Californians, and each candidate wants to seal up the Golden State. Bush weakly admitted ''I'm for clean water,'' even though he supported the veto of the Clear Water Act. Dukakis shot back, claiming that the veto cut funds that Dukakis needed to help clean up Boston Harbor. Dukakis scored points by defending his environmental record in this way.

Dukakis edged Bush out in his command of the issues, but Bush came across as the more personable candidate. This came as no surprise to many onlookers. However, it's doubtful that the debate will have any sizable effect on how voters decide. No major gaffes were made, but each candidate easily conformed to his stereotype. In other words, this debate didn't offer much new information for the voters. It's too bad that the American public loses this debate.

ZBT intended no offense to the UCLA community

Editor:

It was with great concern that I read Shari L. Brooks' viewpoint article (Bruin, October 12). The following is a response to her "demand that ZBT paint out the slogans and issue a full apology, or else lose its affiliation."

First, let me assure her that our last intention was to offend any member of the UCLA community. We have no interest in adding to the already tenuous bonds that UCLA fraternities have with the UCLA community in general.

In light of this, it is our intention to fortify rather than enfeeble our relationship so that we may better interact in the future. As a result, we have painted over those words which you felt were offensive, and I offer my sincere apology to any person finding those words upsetting.

Let me add, however, that if the relationship between our fraternity (and Greeks in general) and other members of the UCLA community is to improve, better communication must be approached from both ends.

I am aware of the fact that additional signatures were submitted with the viewpoint article. While on the one hand I am glad that the matter has been brought to my attention and corrected, I am, on the other hand, disturbed that neither Ms. Brooks nor any of the other petitioned persons had informed me previous to this unfortunate measure. If we are going to pursue a "neighborly" relationship, then we should begin by first improving the means by which we interact.

Finally, we too are members of the UCLA community, and we value both the institutions and persons of which it is composed.

UCLA's Greek system is, by nature, elitist and discriminatory

By Eliezer Ben Shmuel

I would like to respond to the viewpoint articles of Shirl Buss (Bruin, October 10) and Shari L. Brooks (Bruin, October 12), who both try to address the problems of the fraternity system. Both articles appeal for a reform of the system — one for internal reforms and the other to the administration. While both are high-minded in their objectives, they fail to address the real problems of the system.

To begin with, I am not a stranger to the Greek system. I was a member of that system for three years, and most of the people who knew me during that time would attest to the fact that I was a loyal member of both my house and the system itself. I held numerous positions in my fraternity and enjoyed all of the trappings it offered. In fact, prior to my deactivation this summer, I was chosen to be Pledge Father, a position in which I would have integrated new pledges into my house. Thus, I feel qualified to comment on the system.

To begin with, the premises assumed by the two writers and the points that the Greeks would like you to believe must be spelled out. First of all, every Greek you will speak with will tell you that, while there are certain minimum standards for them, there are no real prejudices which guide their selection of rushees. They are willing to talk with anyone and give everybody a chance. They will sight the unwillingness of minorities to come by for Rush as the main reason the system is so predominately white, not anything within the system itself. "If they rushed, they'd be represented," is a typical sentiment among Greeks. Second of all, many Greeks assert that, once a person gets into the house, brotherhood or sisterhood takes over. While parties and socializing are obvious parts of the houses, they are not the end all and be all of the system. Rather, they strive for other, higher purposes such as camaraderie and community service. Lastly, as for relations with people outside of the house, most Greeks will say that they are not influenced by a person's affiliation or non-affiliation in the system. Rather, they are able to think for themselves on these points.

The problem is that every one of these statements is either flawed or just outright wrong. To begin with, Rush is a time for specialized selection. "Top" houses are trying to maintain their standing within the system. A top ranking assures the members of a constant influx of desirable members of the opposite sex, while a lower ranking will result in a social quagmire. Thus, a rusher within the house will look for very specific, superficial qualifications when approaching a candidate. A typical rusher will approach a rushee in this manner:

(1) Take a look. Look good? Talking well? In the case of fraternities, is he doing well with the women? If impressed, go on to step 2. If not, go on to the next rushee.

(2) Talk with the rushee, if at all possible, with another member of the house so that the conversation can keep moving. The rushee can be evaluated in a maximum of five minutes, usually less. Is the rushee a partyer? Social? Impressed yet? Go to step 3.

(3) If you like the rushee, vote for him. Of course, if your "bro" or "sis" tells you not to, despite your best judgment you may not vote for the rushee. Also remember that no matter what, in most houses, a tiny percentage, representing a fraction of the house, can blackball a candidate for any reason, no matter what you think of him/her.

The point of this procedure is to locate and identify those rushees that are deemed "letter-worthy," i.e. will the person make you feel important if they are wearing your same letters, or will you instinctively cringe when they walk up and give you

The reason for the French Revolution

By Marc Canu

In reference to an article on the French Revolution (Bruin, Oct. 7), there was a statement made by Professor Ed Berenson regarding to living standards at the time. He stated that, ". . . the distinction between standards of living were not great enough to put them in heavy conflict." My impression of this statement was that the French people were not justified to start the Revolution.

Keeping a completely objective viewpoint, I believe that the Revolution was the result of centuries of oppression by the ruling class. Barbara Tuchman, a noted historian who wrote A Distant Mirror: The Calamitous 14th Century, examined medieval France form different aspects. She mentioned the peasant revolts against the ruling class which were put down, albeit at a great cost. Whey did this occur? The peasants worked very hard on the land and were taxed very heavily at times, and the living conditions were horrible. Granted, this was the Middle Ages, and disease as well as ignorance were prevalent. The ruling class used the tax money not just to finance military campaigns and support the Church, but also to support their lavish lifestyles.

As centuries passed, the ruling class did not change their ways, and the peasants' resentment grew. Another source had shown that between 1726 and 1789 the peasants' quality of life in the countryside worsened due to increasing prices, falling wages and unchanging land rents. These, coupled with demographic expansion and fewer available jobs, made life even more difficult.

The people in the cities fared better than their countryside counterparts because of education, industrial and commercial development. Yet they had perceived the inadequacies of the present government.

The monarchy at the time of the Revolution was resistant to change which was so badly needed. Unfair taxation, privileges to the ruling class and non-involvement of citizens in the political decision-making process all served to fuel the fires of the Revolution.

Once the Revolution started in Paris, it was only a short time before it spread to the countryside. If the peasants in the countryside were not so badly off, why did they rise up and support the Revolution? It seems to be that the people, in general, were not happy with the way they were living. They had tried to change things, but in legal ways. The monarchy opposed them. The people did not have much choice. The Revolution itself was an event that had to occur.

Canu is a senior majoring in geography/ecosystems.

This group would address the issues and concerns pertinent to students with disabilities. The Union for Students with Disabilities was formed and will become official next week. The USD will be an umbrella group that will be open to students with disabilities as well as to students and/or administrators interested in disability related issues.

At the moment, there are a handful of students who are planning the agenda for the USD. If you are interested in joining the USD or if you have any questions, please come to our first general membership meeting on Monday, October 17, at 3:00 p.m. in Ackerman 3517.

FRATERNITIES: Charity isn't a high priority

the handshake? Those who don't make a satisfactory first impression — because of uneasiness with the surroundings (typical of many freshman and minority rushees), nervousness or sloppy appearance — will find their chances are very slim.

Arguments about the equality and fairness of rush are cosmetic; the reality is that seiectivity is the order of the week during rush. This rush's supreme irony, in my opinion, is exemplified by the use of a reggae theme by one of the "top" houses on campus. Their shirts, which display the red, gold and green flag of the Rastafarian religion, would seem to indicate that they have expanded their horizons. However, I tend to doubt that the Rasta themes of brotherhood, redemption and equality were the guiding points of this rush. Rather, their shirts are an indication of a surface appreciation of a musical movement whose message is ignored, while its symbols are misused.

Second, once in the house, the main objective of the members are two: partying and socializing. All other pursuits — brotherhood/sisterhood, community service, school involvement — are asides. When was the last time you heard someone say: "I joined the house for its wonderful work with the poor"? In fact, a talk with most chairmen of philanthropies will reveal that most Greeks are coerced into participation in charity events, either by threats of fines or social probations. Brotherhood/sisterhood is a sentiment which rarely survives the first year. Afterwards, most Greeks will stay in a clique of a few friends, be friendly with most of the rest of the house, and despise a few members behind their backs. The hostility between the members almost never surfaces into actual conflicts for the sake of appearances and because they are bound together by the letters on their chests.

As for the world outside of their house, Greeks tend to treat others on a hierarchal basis. To prove this point, find three Greeks of the opposite sex who are in the same house. Walk up to one and start talking. Eventually, identify yourself as a member of a "top" house and see how the conversation develops. Then walk up to another one and identify yourself as a member of a "lower" house. Sit back and watch the difference. Then walk up to the third and identify yourself as a non-Greek. You will see that the three conversations will result in very different outcomes. You will be the same, but the attitude will change dramatically depending on your status in their eyes.

Why is this all true? It is because the Greek system, by its very nature, engenders competition between the houses. This competition results in a ranking of houses from lowest to the highest and an attitude by most Greeks that this hierarchy is the way in which they should run their lives. The only way to address the problems of the system on a reform level is to strike at the heart of the problem — to eliminate the competitive, hierarchal nature of the system. This remedy, however, will also destroy the Greek system, a result which is obviously unacceptable to Greeks and to many independents as well.

Thus, there is no permanent solution for the elitism and discrimination within the system. We can only address individual incidents as they come up. Acceptance of this point, while discouraging for most people outside the system, is crucial if the system is to be understood and dealt with.

Kronos Quartet generates exciting and diverse music

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Intense and rewarding are two words that aptly describe the Kronos Quartet concert experience. The UCLA community will get the chance to take in the renowned Kronos musical energy tomorrow evening in Royce Hall as the acclaimed Bay Area-based ensemble performs a concert presented by UCLA's Center for the Performing Arts.

"This is our sixth year at UCLA," said violinist David Harrington in interview. (The rest of the Quartet consists of violinist John Sherba, violist Hank Dutt and cellist Joan Jeanrenaud). "But it's our first time at Royce Hall." The modern-music group will be performing other concerts in their UCLA Kronos Quartet series this year, at Wadsworth Theater on January 15, and Schoenberg Hall on Feb. 18.

Most of the contemporary works performed by the Quartet are specially commissioned pieces. According to Harrington, Saturday evening's concert will feature some pieces that the quartet have never played before in Los Angeles. "I'm very excited about all of them, because it seems to me that there's a renewed vigor and activity among people writing quartet music right now" said Harrington. "The vitality of what's happening is tremendously stimulating and exciting for us, and I hope for our audiences as well."

According to Harrington, all of the pieces on tomorrow's program are quite recent. The newest piece, just completed two days ago, is "Nostalgia in Times Square" by Charlie Mingus and Julius Hamphill. The oldest work is "Quartet No. 1," written in 1960 by the Polish composer Krzysztof Penderecki.

"(Penderecki)'s 'Quartet No. 1' in a way almost set the tone for a whole generation of modern music," said Harrington. During performance, the score to this piece will be projected onto a screen, so that "the whole audience can see the music as we're playing it," said the musician. "It's a fascinating score because there are different sound effects that you wouldn't normally associate with quartet playing that are happening right before your eyes. By the end of the piece, which is about six minutes long, the whole audience would know how to read a contemporary score."

Kronos' philosophy in presenting its music determines the selection of the works to be included in a program. "What we're trying to do is put together experiences of music that have dimension and shape and variety," said Harrington, adding that the each player's individual expression is also stressed.

According to Harrington, composing an evening's program is very much like how a composer would compose a piece. He considers the concert's opening work, Terri Riley's "Half-wolf Dances Mad in Moonlight," as an overture which sets the stage for the subsequent pieces.

One of the evening's most distinctive compositions promises to be "Black Angels" by George Crumb. Designed for amplified quartet, this work features many other instruments including gongs, crystal glasses and moraccas. "All kinds of things," said Harrington.

The music that Kronos makes is definitely the result of group effort. Although Harrington is the one who initiates most new projects, the final product carries a communal, interactive essence between the four members, who were all trained originally as classical performers. "It takes all four of us to put our music together," said Harrington. "It's handmade, and our interpretation takes a lot of rehearsal, a lot of time. We put a lot of energy into what we're presenting, and it's a four-way discussion all the time. I bring a lot of the music into the rehearsal. I'm kind of the one that's kind on the lookout for the next piece. But each of us have our own function in the group."

Much of the Quartet's inspiration and influence come from the composers around the world whom they come into contact and get to work with. "We've met each of the composers on this program, except for Penderecki and Mingus," said Harrington. "So there's a lot of influences from composers. We use their energy, and from there we take the music to where it's going to be taken." According to Harrington, the Quartet's objective in performing is to open up the audience's listening experience and musical horizon. "I would like people to feel creatively refreshed," he said. "I would hope people to be more curious about music, and more accepting of variety than maybe they had been before they came to one of our concerts."

The violinist has high ambitions for the music that Kronos creates. He believes that the diversity and quality of the pieces the group has chosen to perform will have a powerful effect on the listener. "When you have a chance to hear a lot of things that are really well written, and come from really individual viewpoints and different parts of the world, a concert can be just a tremendous experience . . . Of humanity in a certain way," he said.

Harrington and the Quartet cull their influences from an astounding range of contemporary music from around the world. "There's a lot of music out there that I find interesting," said Harrington. "Much of our music is influenced by different ethnic music or jazz."

Harrington cites Astor Piazzolla as an example. "He's the tango master in the whole world

Tchaikovsky's 'Swan Lake' visually stunning

By J.D.Wolverton, Senior Staff Writer

■ BALLET: The Moscow Classical Ballet. Performing Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake. Artistic Directors: Natalia Kasatkina and Vladimir Vasiliov. Presented by the Ambassador International Cultural Foundation. October 11, 12 & 13, 1988 at the Pasadena Civic Auditorium. For information and tickets call (818) 304-6161 or (213) 681-0212.

In another one of those welcome cultural benefits that can result from warmer superpower relations, the Moscow Classical Ballet has settled in for a five-day engagement at Pasadena's Civic Auditorium.

Tuesday evening's premiere of a new production of Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake deserves the attention of all dance fans. It is, with three acts and four scenes, as complete a performance of the ballet as we are likely to see in this area for a while.

Nadezhda Pavlova, one of the world's greatest ballerinas, was quite wonderful in the dual role of Odette-Odile. She was ably partnered by Vladimir Malakhov as Prince Siegfried, a "danseur noble" working in the tradition of Nureyev and Baryshnikov. They executed the several extremely demanding pas de deux in the work with consummate skill and artistry.

The costumes and sets, designed by the brilliant Briton, Tim Goodchild, are outstanding. No expense seems to have been spared in creating some of the most lavish costumes which this reviewer has ever seen in a ballet production.

Brian Harris' lighting design displays these to beautiful effect, and is evocatively employed to create a wide range of moods in the work.

The one area where the production could be faulted would be in the orchestral department. As anyone who has heard the music knows, Swan Lake is one of Peter Tchaikovsky's supreme achievements in the realm of ballet music — an art which he raised to unequaled heights at the end of the 19th century.

Unfortunately, however, the orchestra accompanying the production was just under 40 players — about half the size of the forces which are usually employed in this work. The company is travelling with sixteen Soviet musicians — who perform all of the solos — while the remaining musicians are recruited from the local area.

Some of the string playing sounded a little ragged here and there, and the oboe solos were not always ingratiatingly executed. The important violin solos were very well done, though, and there was some good work from the trumpets and tympanist.

These quibbles aside, it must be said that the playing was usually never less than adequate over the course of the evening. I just wish that some more money had been expended to produce a sound that fully matched the visual sumptuousness of the production.

(This Saturday, Oct. 15 at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday, Oct. 16 at 2 and 8 p.m., the full-length production of Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet will be staged by the Moscow Classical Ballet at Pasadena Civic Auditorium.)

Thought-provoking 'Accused' flawed but important

By I. Nordstrom
Staff Writer

■ FILM: The Accused. Director Jonathan Kaplan. Written by Tom Topor. Producers Stanley R. Jaffe, Sherry Lansing. With Kelly McGillis, Jodie Foster. A Paramount release.

A rape victim once spoke to my high school class about adjusting to her ordeal. She began with the story of how she was attacked. The woman, then a mini-skirted teenager, had been assaulted in a deserted area of her small town. After the rapist left her, she ran into the first store she could find. Crying and bruised, with her clothing ripped, she told the woman working there that she'd been raped. "That's what you girls get for wearing such short skirts," the woman replied.

The incident often comes to mind when a story of rape flits across the television screen or appears briefly in the newspaper only to disappear entirely or, months later, after the case is swallowed into the court system, surface with mention of the rapist receiving a brief, perfunctory sentence.

The new film The Accused confronts not only the crime of rape, but the ingrained societal prejudices surrounding the bankrupt idea of "victims' accountability." In asking who exactly is put on trial in rape cases, and what responsibility is borne by those who see — or even encourage — a crime and do nothing to stop it, The Accused is a ground breaking film.

It is not "Art" meant to be marvelled at and studied. At times distressingly weak at the seams, its story nonetheless carries an emotional force that is startling and disturbing.

Though fictional, The Accused has a foundation in real-life horrors such as the Kitty Genovese murder — when a young woman was killed while an apartment complex full of her neighbors listened to her screams and did nothing to aid her — and, clearly, the gang rape of a young woman in a Massachusetts bar full of applauding onlookers.

Sarah Tobias (Jodi Foster) is a working-class woman brutally gang-raped in a bar amidst a crowd that cheers, laughs, and does nothing to help her. Upwardly-mobile, promising Assistant D.A. Katheryn Murphy (Kelly McGillis) is appointed to prosecute Sarah's attackers for rape.

Fearing that Sarah's tough demeanor and criminal record, compounded with the grilling any rape victim faces in court, will not fare well in trial, Murphy settles for a lesser charge and does not call Tobias to testify. (The three rapists are sentenced to two to five years, which means they could be out in six months; horrifyingly enough, the light sentence is the same one they could have received for the rape charge.)

Tobias is enraged that her tragedy has gone unacknowledged by the courts and that she was not allowed to tell her story. She confronts Murphy, who is embarrassed but remains largely unmoved, secure in her belief that lack of education and lower-class status make Tobias some lesser species of mammal.

It isn't until Tobias cracks — attacking one of the men who had urged on the rapists — that Murphy sees for herself how Tobias has been treated not only by the rapists and bystanders, but by the courts: as a subhuman who "deserved" to be raped.

The rapists cannot be retried, but Murphy becomes determined to bring to justice the men who have, with impunity, been accessories to the felony by cheering on the rape. Her efforts seem doomed from the start. The only man in the bar who had tried to help Tobias by calling the police — a young fraternity boy whose best friend had raped her — is reluctant to testify, and Tobias' female friend, Sally, who witnessed and ignored the crime, is a damaging "character witness."

Tobias herself is savaged by the defense. She is asked why she hadn't screamed "Help" or "Rape" instead of "No. No" while she was being attacked (so that any observers could be sure what was going on); and asked if she could be sure that the people in the bar knew that she was being raped when she was held down and stripped of her clothing. "Didn't you at least try to signal someone with your eyes?" the lawyer asks.

A rape victim depicted as a cloistered virgin would be too

Jodie Foster and Kelly McGillis.

'ACCUSED': Courageous first step

easy, and would do nothing to dispel the anti-victim bias that surrounds the crime.

The Accused is most notable for not shrinking from this volatile subject. The film walks straight into the minefield of prejudice that so often surrounds rape victims, confronting the myth of "deserving it" and, hopefully, trampling the antiquated notion. Sarah Tobias is sexy and unabashedly seductive. She lives with her boyfriend, smokes pot, gets drunk, and talks like a sailor: the model scapegoat.

While McGillis' tight-lipped Murphy is a little too stiff, Jodi Foster's performance is believable and riveting. Director Johnathan Kaplan makes some awkward choices — a corny T.V.-style fade-in, fade-out scene is most obvious — but allows the story to unfold slowly, maximizing the audience's look at Sarah Tobias.

However, a nagging question remained with me after viewing the movie: why is the graphic gang rape scene here? Must sex be called in to bolster sales for a movie about the tragedy of a crime?

I feel that the scene greatly detracts from the movie's message, but I acknowledge that it does add insight into Tobias' character. Perhaps this was its goal — to pose a question to the audience: what would you have done if you had been in the bar?

Perhaps The Accused will right some misconceptions about rape, rape victims, and the responsibility of witnesses. Perhaps it will pave the way for another, better film that does not need to portray nine-tenths of its male characters as potentially violent, sex-dependent, or insensitive. The Accused is a first step, courageous in tackling the taboo of rape, and for this it deserves praise.

right now, an incredible musician/composer. He came to one of our concerts a couple of years ago, and went home and wrote this quartet for us ('Four, for Tango') in the form of a tango."

The music the Quartet selected for Saturday's performance reflects their internationalist orientation. The pieces are by composers from the Soviet Union, Argentina, New Zealand, Poland, South Africa, and the United States.

Harrington singled out Jack Body's "Amandriana" from New Zealand as one that embodied the world-wide interaction of musical strains. "That piece is just to show how musical seeds travel all over the world on currents of air," he said. "It is influenced by Madagascan zither music, and judging by the music alone — I don't know anything about the political history or anything — there's influences of India, Africa and Spain, and all kinds of things in that country. It must be a wild place."

Harrington urges innovative student musicians just starting out to just keep their ears open. "What I try to do is just keep my ears open all the time," he said, "just kind of be ready for that next experience that might just take you somewhere where you had no idea you might go."

The violinist is very optimistic about the current state of exciting, contemporary music around the world. "Right now is definitely a high point," he said. "There's no question about it. You can feel it from the music that's being written. For me, it's definitely moving in a positive direction. I just feel like that the next piece may be the greatest piece."

According to Harrington, there are people around the world who are capable of writing the "next greatest piece." The Kronos Quartet keeps in touch with composers and musicians from disparate places ranging from Uganda, South America and Australia to Japan, China and the Soviet Union.

"For me, it's a matter of trying to be ready for that experience when it might happen, whenever it might happen," he said.

Harrington believes that the current increase in cultural internationalism makes today a most exciting time to compose music. "Musicians can really take advantage of the overabundance of communication systems right now," he said.

Having toured throughout the world, Kronos has had its share of memorable performances. "There's a great night club in Tokyo where we like to play," said Harrington. "There's a beautiful concert hall in Berlin that we were in just recently, and in London there's a great club."

How do audiences respond to Kronos around the world? "We're fortunate that there seems to be an audience out there who has a real excitement about life, and who is there to hear music when they come to our concerts."

(The Kronos Quartet will perform Saturday at 8 p.m. in Royce Hall. The Kronos Quartet Series is supported in part by the National Endowment for the Arts. Tickets available at UCLA Central Ticket Office. $7 student tickets with valid I.D.)

'Jump Off Cliff Notes' is stupid, offensive parody

By I. Nordstrom
Staff Writer

■ BOOK: Jump Off the Cliff Notes. By Gina and Annette Cascone. Published by Bart Books, $4.95 paperback.

Parodies are only as good as their ratio of intelligence to irreverence, with a favorable mix including large doses of the former.

Jump Off the Cliff Notes, a spoof of those sub-academic gospels, Cliff Notes, is not a parody but a perverse mixture of the inane and the offensive — a long homophobic harangue and a racist potshot punctuate the book's bathroom humor.

The mileage authors Gina and Annette Cascone get out of one pathetic fourth-grade-level joke about Moby Dick (yeah, you guessed the joke) is, I suppose, some sort of accomplishment; getting nine pages of bad penis jokes published must have taken some doing.

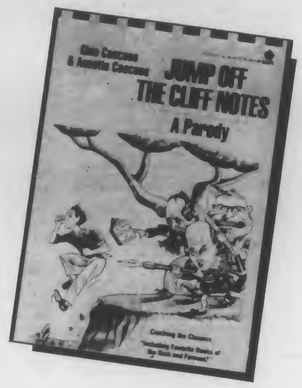
The Old Man and the Sea, Animal Farm, The Grapes of Wrath and A Tale of Two Cities, put through the Cascone mangler, emerge as something Larry Flynt and a repressed pre-adolescent might come up with in a brainstorming session.

Jump is actually at its best when hovering at sex-joke level. When it sinks to referring to Asians as "yellow," and indulging in gay stereotypes, it moves into the gutter.

The Cascones dig their claws into Nathaniel Hawthorne and Herman Melville, depicting them as gay lovers — and using this as a vehicle for mocking gays: Hawthorne is called "Peaches," loves to wear female clothes and tries to find someone who will spank him.

Jump Off the Cliff Notes is not just stupid, it's offensive. Certainly, putting the tag of "humor" on garbage does not make it smell any sweeter.

Spoofing "the classics" is no crime. I just wish this idea had fallen in with more inspired company, and that Jump hadn't been able to spread its authors' prejudices via a large publishing company.



YOU CAN STAND BY AND ANALYZE OUR GROWTH . . . OR BECOME PART OF IT.

ing his Pac-10 Championships team.

"I'd like to see a set group come out of (the Mustang Invitational)," Messina said. "I want to decide who I want to rest for the next week and work them though to the Pac-10's (on Oct. 31).

Messina's top five for tomorrow's meet seem to be on a pace to land them on the Pac-10 squad.

Laurie Chapman, the Bruins number one runner so far this season, is expected to lead the Bruins again tomorrow.

The second through fifth positions are also locked up, at least for tomorrow. Kim Stewart, Pam Thompson and Debbie Williams—who are both suffering from colds—and Tammy Snyder—recovering from a foot injury—should run the course.

The sixth and seventh spots are being contested between three runners. Laura Chapel, Jennifer Ashe, and Kristi Bache will vie for the final two varsity spots.

Volleyball

Bruins probably lies within themselves. Psyching up for teams that they are heavily favored to beat after an emotional victory over a team like USC is not an easy task. One of the bigger tasks for the UCLA team is to maintain their current level of intensity through the season.

The Bruins have fallen victim to their own self confidence before. Past season records show that the Bruins have had difficult games against easier competitors because of a lack of spirit.

The current Bruin volleyball team does show marked differences to years past. With only one senior and a slew of underclassmen to fill major roles, mistakes of the past seem foreign to the current crop of spikers.

The Bruins have proven to much of the Pac-10 as well as the majority on NCAA coaches that they can perform in tough matches. Pre-season questions as to whether the young Bruins could handle the pressure of a big match were quickly smothered when the team flattened the defending national champion University of Hawaii and top ranked University of Illinois early in the season.

In terms of playing top ten teams, the second half of the UCLA season will be much easier than their previous matches. A second meeting with Stanford, a possible match up with Brigham Young in the National Invitational Volleyball Tournament, and the University of Pacific are the only current top ten teams left for UCLA to play. Even more, nine of the 15 remaining matches for UCLA will be either in the Wooden Center or in Pauley Pavilion. The biggest and most difficult task will probably be remaining on top.

Should the Bruins be able to maintain their current excellence, UCLA has some school records in view to break. The record for most consecutive victories and best season start ever may be broken in Pauley Pavilion at the NIVT where USC, BYU, and Colorado State will be the prospective match-ups.

In support of amateur athletics and academic achievement Honda is honoring athletes who hit the books as hard as they hit the field. Each award winner's school receives $2,000 toward its general scholarship fund. Winners are announced all season long on ABC-TV's coverage of Big 10/Pac 10 football. Congratulations, Scholar Athletes. You prove that on or off the field there's only one way to play it. Smart. HONDA the last three games. In fact, he has more picks than touchdowns. He'll have to play almost error-free ball Saturday if the Bears are talking victory.

Not only will the Beardefense be tested in the air, it will be attacked on the ground as well. UCLA is averaging 256 yards per game rushing behind the tandem of Eric Ball and Shawn Wills, and the duo becomes a threesome Saturday with sophomore Brian Brown returning. Brown will also join Wills in returning kicks, which may just provide the Bruins with another devastating punch.

Overall, the Bruin offense is rolling up 495.8 yards per game, and lighting up the scoreboard to the tune of 43.6 points per game.

For the Bears, Taylor will need more protection from his offensive line, and he'll need a big game from Chris Richards, the Golden Bears' senior tailback. Richards has been averaging 79 yards a game, but the Bruin front seven is second-best in the conference at stopping the rush, allowing only 105.8 yards per game, second behind Southern Cal.

Defensively, the Golden Bears have been solid—although their pass defense is suspect. They rank fourth in the Pac-10 in rushing defecse and fifth in total defense, and junior inside linebacker David "the Shark" Ortega leads the way. The 6-2, 225 animal from Whittier has 54 tackles this season. The Bears are still without defensive tackle Joel Dickson, who is recovering from a gunshot wound he suffered outside a dance at a local watering hole (See page 26).

Steve Hendrickson, "the Shark's" partner in crime at the other inside spot, has 52 tackles and two sacks.

However, Hendrickson, the Shark and the rest of Golden Bear defense were eaten alive by the Washington State Cougars, as they ran up 504 yards last week, and they may be in for more of the same.

In other words, look for Aikman to be a winner with a TKO in the third quarter.

Bear player recovers from recent shooting

By David Gibson
Assistant Sports Editor

Cal Berkeley is startled after star defensive end Joel Dickson was shot twice on Saturday, October 1 in a local student pub after a Bear win over San Jose State.

Story has it that a few guys were hassling the wife of one of Dickson's teammates. Dickson glared at them and,after the dance at about 1:30 a.m., the guys were outside waiting for him. They asked him if he had a problem, and Dickson replied "No."

Again they asked him if he had a problem, and he replied with the same answer. He then saw a flash and realized there had been some gun shots. He ran back inside the dance—when he realized he had been shot. One bullet went through his forearm and into his left flank. Another bullet went through his triceps and embedded into his biceps.

Dickson has since had the bullets removed from his arm, but the one in his side remains. He has been released from the hospital and attended a press conference on Monday. Cal head coach Bruce Snyder predicted that Dickson would return to play in about three weeks.

Last year, because of injuries to Cal's defensive front, the coaches moved Dickson from linebacker to defensive tackle. The decision paid off immediately as, in his first game at tackle versus Oregon, he recorded four quarterback sacks—the most ever in a single game at Cal.

By the end of the year, Dickson registered a team leading nine sacks, which was good enough for third best in the conference. Dickson also recorded 14 tackles behind the line of scrimmage, which stood fourth best in the Pac-10. He was named a preseason All-Pac-10 selection by The Sporting News.

Police at Cal have arrested a suspect in the shooting. Kenneth Jackson, 19, of Richmond, turned himself in this week and has been charged with attempted murder.

knock off the 17-1 Bruins. Stanford brings a 15-4 record into the game along with a No. 4 ranking. The two teams have faced each other twice in tournament action this season, with UCLA grabbing the pair, 10-5 and 6-3. In the last meeting two weeks ago at the NorCal Tournament, the Bruins did it with defense by completely shutting down the balanced Cardinal attack. Senior Mike VanderWaerdt starred in goal for the Bruins.

Saturday's match in Berkeley should be one of the best of the season, considering the controversy surrounding last year's game. In 1987, the teams split the two games, with UCLA winning at home, 8-7. Problems regarding the officiating always seem to surface in games between these two clubs. Adding that to the already fierce rivalry and the large crowds, Saturday's contest should be one to watch.

The two victories over the Bears (currently 17-2 and ranked No. 2) were not as comfortable as those against Stanford. Each game was decided by one goal, with the Bruins winning 8-7 in the Irvine Tournament and 5-4 in the finals of the NorCal.

The Bruins will be led by senior Hank Peterson and junior Alex Rousseau, who have 48 and 45 goals, respectively. Senior Scott Leonard (26 goals) and junior Mark Maretzki (21) can also put the ball in the net. Gn defense, senior Fernando Carsalade will be sure to lead UCLA, as evidenced by his team-high 24 steals.

The Coaches' Poll for this week shows the dominance of the Pac-10 (actually the Pac-4), as behind UCLA and Cal is USC (11-3) and Stanford. The remainder of the top 10 is as follows: No. 5, Cal State Long Beach (7-5); No. 6, UC Irvine (7-7); No. 7, UC Santa Barbara (12-3); No. 8, University of Pacific (7-5); and a tie for ninth between Fresno State (7-10) and UC San Diego (6-7).

Women's soccer up for some war

By Wendy Witherspoon
Staff Writer

It's shaping up to be a brutal weekend as the UCLA women's soccer team will face two foes whom they haven't seen since last year. San Diego State and Cal State Northridge will provide two excellent opportunities to elevate UCLA's level of play, if any team could provide that for the Bruins (4-0-1) in the league.

"It's going to be a battle," said co-captain Mary Haupt about Saturday's game against San Diego State. "It has always been a mental block for us with San Diego."

Haupt has special reason to have a mental block with San Diego State due to last season's weird and wild one at Aztec Stadium. With 15 minutes remaining in last year's game at SDSU and the score tied 0-0, the game ball rolled out of bounds behind the Bruin goalie box.

At that moment, two children who had been playing behind the goal, let their ball roll on the field and an Aztec player tapped it in. As UCLA players turned to prepare for the ball to be returned to play, the referee called a goal.

After Bruin coach Afshin Ghotbi filed an official complaint, it was up to the league commissioner to review the incident. The commissioner handed down a decision in favor of SDSU at the end-of-the-year league tourney. This decision marred UCLA's perfect record and caused them to place second in tourney.

With starters Lisa Vanderburg and Pam England out of the SDSU battle Saturday due to red cards from last weekend's Cal Poly nightmare, Ghotbi will need to reshuffle his normal game plan.

The SDSU battle will take place Saturday, on the UCLA North Athletic Field at 2 p.m.

Sunday, the Bruins will travel to California State University, Northridge to meet the Matadors in what is expected to be the most exciting match-up of the season.

"They're one of the best teams. . .They were on fire all over us," said Ghotbi after last year's 3-3 tie with the Matadors in the end-of-the-year tourney.

The Bruins have not seen the Matadors since last season's "loss" to them in the league tourney. Due to their regular season "loss" to SDSU last season, the tie with CSUN in the league tournament caused the Bruins to miss out on taking first in the tourney.

So, simply, this is a revenge match.

The CSUN duel will take place at Matador Stadium at 1 p.m.

Bell curve at a peak for women

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

Women's crtss country coach Bob Larsen likens this season to a bell curve, and at the halfway point, his runners have reached a peak. After a moh of intense training and competition, Messina's squad looks primed on paper. In reality, the weeks of work are beginning to take their toll.

"There aren't more than four or five of (the runners) that can. . .tell me they feel terrific, that they feel 100 percent," Messina said. "Right now were at a peak in training and it's showing."

On the plus side, though, the Bruins may be more ready than ever to take on the tough competition at tomorrow's Mustang Invitational at Cal Poly San Luis Obispo.

If UCLA's harriers can overcome their minor ailments—everything from aches and pains to the common cold—they may be able to run with some of the nation's best. Nebraska and Kansas State, teams that set the pace in the Midwest, will join Southwest power Rice as the favorites to run away with a team victory.

Not only is this a chance for the Bruins to gague how they match up against national powers, it's also a chance for Messina to mark the progress of his varsity team and start plann-

Male harriers are aching at SLO

The hopes of UCLA's men's cross country team are riding on some shaky legs as the Bruins prepare for their second big race of the year, the Mustang Invitational, set for tomorrow at Cal Poly San Luis Obispo.

Before the Bruins think about overcoming the stiff competition—tomorrow or for the rest of the season—they'll have to overcome a plague of injuries. Victor Santamaria, UCLA's top runner early in the year, will be unable to run due to lingering quadriceps cramps.

"If Victor Santamaria isn't ready to go full bore we'll have our hands full," admitted head coach Bob Larsen.

Joe Nitti, who had hopes of bolstering the Bruins this season, is still recovering from tedonitis in both legs. Larsen knows that Nitti must regain his mid-year form if his team is to be competitive.

But can Nitti make up for the absence of Richard Erbes? Erbes, only a freshman, has already made his presence known. On Oct. 1 in Stanford, Erbes was the Bruins' second finisher and 15th overall. Unfortunately for Larsen, Erbes will be out tomorrow with a hip injury.

Even if the Bruins were in the best of health, the tough competition would be enough to worry about. A pair of powerhouses from the Midwest, 10th-ranked Nebraska and Kansas State, are favored to lead the pack at Cal Poly SLO.

USC, Cal, UC Irvine, and CSULA should run with the Bruins. At this point in the season, Larsen hoped that his crew would have surpassed the best in the west be running with the elite.

The numerous injuries, however, have put a hold on Larsen's hopes. "(The injuries) may throw us back in with...the group that we were fighting last time," he said, alluding to the Stanford meet, where UCLA finished third behind Stanford and Arizona and just ahead of USC and Cal.

But with two of the top five runners—Santamaria and Erbes—out, UCLA's remaining varsity will be hard pressed to even keep pace with the West Coast teams.

Expected to run for the Bruins tomorrow are seniors Ortiz, Nitti Christian Cushing-Murray, Mike Wangler, and Sergio O'Cadiz. Juniors Mark Dani—who has finished second overall in his last two meets—and Beat Ammann also will run, along with sophomore Bill Meyer and freshmen Jeff Korn, Jeff Wood, Sven Huang and Sean Noonan.

It's a battle of Troys at Berkeley

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

The No. 2 football team in the country, the UCLA Bruins, take their "Air Aikman" show on the road as they journey up I-5 to Strawberry Canyon to take on the California Golden Bears at Berkeley.

The Bears, thought by some in the pre-season to be on their way to a bowl game, have been disappointing at best. The Bears are 3-2, 0-2 in the conference and look to be sinking to the bottom of the tough Pac-10.

Adding to head coach Bruce Snyder's woes is the fact that Cal hasn't beaten UCLA in 17 years, and they haven't won at home against the Bruins in 20.

Another bad omen for the Bears is the fact that they ran up over 500 yards of offense against Washington State last week and still lost, managing only 13 points. Snyder must have had some choice words in the locker room.

Look for the battle of the Troys to decide this one.

In one corner, wearing the powder blue and gold, a 6-3, 217 senior from Henryetta, Oklahoma, is Troy Aikman.

In the other corner, wearing the navy blue and gold, is a 6-4, 185 junior from Rancho Cordova, California—Troy Taylor.

Aikman, of course, is the Heisman hopeful who is putting up some big numbers. Aikman has completed 84 of 127 passes for 1103 yards for 14 touchdowns and only four interceptions. The Cal pass defense is only seventh in the conference, and it's a sure bet they'll have their hands full with Aikman, who is ranked second in the country in passing efficiency with a 169.2 rating.

Aikman's only real weakness has been the recent play of his offensive line, which allowed four sacks last week and two more against Washington the week before. The line was dominating against Nebraska and, hopefully for Aikman, they can get that intensity back.

Troy Taylor, who as a sophomore hung up 312 yards on UCLA, has been plagued by interceptions. In last week's 44-13 disaster against Washington State, Taylor threw three interceptions, giving him nine in

After the emotional victory over the arch-rival USC Trojans last Tuesday, the UCLA women's volleyball team will be able to come down a notch or two this weekend as they face a couple of easier competitors on friendlier terms.

After a long road trip, the Bruins are finally returning to the Wooden Center, to face the Washington State Cougars and the University of Washington Huskies on Friday and Saturday, respectively. Both match-ups will begin at 7 p.m. on Collins Court.

The Washington schools will mark the fourth and fifth consecutive Pac-10 matches for the Bruins, who currently hold a 14-0 record overall and a 7-0 conference record.

Neither team is expected to be much of a challenge for the top ranked Bruins.

Soccer team whips Lions, 8-0, continues win streak

By Chris Koutures

It was only 1-0 at halftime in a game in which the Bruin men's soccer team was supposed to dominate the Loyola Marymount Lions.

Well, UCLA held up its end of the bargain in the second half, scoring three goals in the first 10 minutes en route to an 8-0 victory. The obvious question: What did Coach Sigi Schmid say at halftime?

"I told the team that we were playing at a tempo which favored them (Loyola), and that we had to become more tenacious and fight for the ball."

Senior John Purzycki got the first goal, which was his second in two games after not scoring in three previous seasons. Sam George got the assist at 16:05.

"I had a chance to play midfield today," stated Purzycki, who usually is a defender. "Mainly, I've been in the right place at the right time."

Purzycki's shot off a George header preceded the floodgates that burst open in the second half.

First, Bill Thompson got the second tally from Mike Lapper and Ray Fernandez, extending his scoring streak to four games.

Then both Lapper and Fernandez got goals of their own, followed by another Thompson goal, with assists to none other than Lapper and Fernandez.

Nick Skvarna, shutout in his senior year before the game, scored twice on this afternoon, sandwiching the two around Aaron Muth's goal, the last of the Bruins' eight goals.

"This game helps our scoring confidence going into a big game like USF this Sunday," stated Schmid.

The Bruins host the Dons of USF at 2 p.m. on Sunday in a key Far Western Region contest.

Water polo faces Cal and Stanford in big weekend

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

The UCLA men's water polo team begins perhaps its most important road trip of the year, as it faces Stanford at 3 p.m. today and defending national champ Cal on Saturday at 11 a.m. The Bruins have defeated each team twice so far this season.

This time last year, the water polo team was struggling. It embarked on a trip to Northern California with an 11-4 record to face the Bears and the Cardinal, the 1986 champ. After a narrow and controversial 6-4 loss to Cal, the Bruins bounced back to beat Stanford for the first time since 1984, 7-5.

This time around things are a little different. UCLA, which is still No. 1 in the nation despite losing to USC last week, is the team to beat. In today's game the upstart Cardinal, which was supposed to be going through a rebuilding year, will try to

Jackson speech rouses students

Urges audience to 'vote with passion'

DAVID ZETLAND/Daily Bruin

Jesse Jackson

By May Wong
Staff Writer

Some were inspired, others were stirred, but most were captivated as the Rev. Jesse Jackson rallied UCLA students last Friday in Westwood Plaza to "make America better" and "vote with a passion" come Nov. 8.

"Whenever young America comes alive, America is always made better," Jackson said to the audience of approximately 4500 students. "Motivation has never come from the top down, but always from the people up. The energy must come from us," he said.

High energy coupled with emotion and conviction emanated from Jackson as he spoke. He equated voting to a "tremendous challenge . . . a judgment about the course of our nation and our world."

"If (Nelson) Mandela could stand in prison . . . then UCLA could vote on Nov. 8," Jackson said.

Mandela, a prisoner in South Africa, is a well-known anti-apartheid activist.

Shouts of support capped every issue and almost every sentence that rolled off Jackson's tongue. The many issues addressed by the former runner for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination ranged from civil rights and liberty to abortion and homelessness.

But the thrust of Jackson's speech was to urge students to vote and to cast their ballots for Michael Dukakis, the Democratic presidential candidate. He often exemplified this by decrying the views and leadership of Republicans, namely Vice President George Bush and Indiana Senator Dan Quayle.

Implying that Republicans are aristocratic, Jackson said, "Aristocratic tradition for the few. Democratic tradition for the masses. (The Republicans) talk of blue blood, but in a democracy . . . everyone has royal blood . . . the right to breathe free."

Jackson sparked laughter with his opening remark, "I would use my notes, but you might confuse me with Dan Quayle."

"I have convictions and I know what I'm talking about," he said.

Calling himself a progressive liberal, Jackson addressed the concepts of liberalism and liberty as well as criticizing conservatives.

"Conservatives . . . conserve values," he said. They want to conserve a tradition the founding fathers set in the Constitution, "a tradition of (excluding everyone but) white male landowners."

But liberals "open, expand, and fix that which is wrong," and that in itself is "conserving a tradition," Jackson argued. He

'Spin doctors' on hand after debate to sell candidates

By Tina Anima and Irena Auerbuch
Staff Writers

On the night of the final presidential debate, "spin doctors" filled the media center set up inside Ackerman Grand Ballroom, ministering political prescriptions to the press "patients." The press, however, appeared skeptical, and for the most part was not buying any of it.

Spin doctors are political party members who try to persuade the media that their candidate has outperformed the other and is best suited for office. The news analysis they provide is far from objective, and is designed to put the "spin" on the media's coverage.

UCLA Nobel laureate honored

Cram one of 13 named University Professor

By Holly Bauer
Staff Writer

Nobel Prize-winning UCLA professor Donald Cram was recently named University Professor, an honor given to only 13 of the 6,900 UC faculty members.

The University Professor title is "a way of honoring researchers and scholars who have gained a national and international reputation. Each University Professor is recognized by the university as a person of great distinction in his or her field," said Paul West, university relations spokesman.

The UC Board of Regents makes the appointments. UCLA currently has two University Professors — Cram and physics Professor Julian Schwinger.

Internationally recognized for his work in organic chemistry, Cram, along with Jean-Marie Lehn and Charles Pederson, received the 1987 Nobel Prize in chemistry.

Cram currently advises a UCLA graduate research program in organic chemistry.

Since he first came to UCLA in 1947, "about 10,000 UCLA students, mostly undergraduates, have passed through my hands," he said.

Cram has published seven books in organic chemistry, one of which has been translated into 11 languages. His published research papers total more than 370.

'My most recent work has been the most personally rewarding field and the most fun.'

— Donald Cram

"I don't know much about this new appointment," he said, noting, however, that he would be based at UCLA, and also be available for lectures and consultation with other UC campuses.

"I am frequently going and giving seminars and also welcoming people from other campuses," Cram explained.

"My most recent work (begun in 1970) has been the most personally rewarding field and the most fun," he said. Cram's work includes designing and synthesizing organic compounds that mimic some of the physiological properties of enzyme systems, ion carriers and other materials.

Post-doctoral students come from all over the world to work with his research program and learn his specialty.

Currently, Cram is working out compounds that determine the amount of sodium and potassium ions in the blood and other body fluids.

His methods, he added, will be in laboratories around the world that conduct analysis for doctors, he added.

In addition to this, "We've made molecules," he said, "compounds that are rigid and hollow, which have incarcerated other molecules during chemical shell closures.

"This is the first time anyone has done this. I don't know what use this is likely to have, but it's stirring up a lot of interest.

"The idea is very simple," he continued. "It's like taking two glasses and putting them rim to rim."

Cram did his undergraduate work at Rollins College in Florida, received his Master's degree at the University of Nebraska, worked with Merck and Company's penicillin project, and completed his doctoral work at Harvard University.

Beer poster may violate trademark

Miller Beer and UCLA do not mix.

Last week a Miller Beer poster promoting UCLA football appeared as an insert in the Daily Bruin. The poster violated UCLA trademark rights and California state law, according to UCLA licensing director Jack Revoyr.

The poster distribution resulted from an oversight in the Daily Bruin Advertising office. UCLA and the Bruin Bear are trademarks, and they generally do not appear in advertisements in the Daily Bruin, said Tiley Chao, Daily Bruin business manager.

Furthermore, it is the Daily Bruin's policy that all inserts be approved by both the business manager and the publications director. In this case the Miller poster was approved by Chao but not submitted to the publications director, Terence Hsiao.

According to Chao, who gave final approval for the poster, her oversight was due to the tremendous amount of extra work associated with the 208-page registration issue that was published one day before the poster was distributed.

Hsiao said the Daily Bruin advertising office is taking steps to ensure that this does not happen again. "This is something that never should have gone through."

The university and the licensing office took this very seriously, said Revoyr. The licensing office has contacted Miller Beer and told the company that it violated the UCLA trademark and California State education code 9200. This code prohibits the use of the commercial use of the UCLA name without permission. Violation of this code is a misdemeanor.

Revoyr is waiting for a response from Miller before determining a course of action.

Miller Beer posters, similar to the one in the Bruin, have appeared in campus newspapers at other Pac-10 schools. The licensing director at the University of Washington said the Miller ad appeared in that campus paper without his permission.

Counselor speaks on skills for singles

Unmarried life now more acceptable, 'big business'

By Miriam Lee
Contributor

In the mid '60s, a young teacher by the name of Roberta Youtan found herself confronted by a six-year-old armed with an unorthodox question: "Miss Youtan, how come you never got married?"

Years later, in the 1970s, this same teacher was a source of admiration for her students because she was an unmarried but content career-woman.

1988 finds Roberta Youtan-Kay, a marriage and family counselor, married and back in the classroom. But instead of teaching children, she is at UCLA lecturing to 70 adults, most of whom are women, on the skill of being "Successfully Single."

Youtan-Kay spoke last Thursday at the second segment of UCLA's Staff and Faculty Service Center presentation of its "Learn-At-Lunch" series, which focuses on health and well-being.

In her presentation she stressed the evolution of single life from a time when being single was a stigma to a state where one can "take one's life situation, focus, and make it a most absolute and positive" experience.

While most people think of singles as those who have never married, Youtan-Kay said this group includes those who have been divorced, widowed or deserted. She cited a government estimate which placed the number of single adults in the United States at nearly 60 million.

"The single status is becoming a much more accepted way of life. It's big business and there is a big market for single people," she commented. She illustrated her statement with a 1986 magazine which listed such famous single women as Lillian Gish, Oprah Winfrey, Donna Mills and Teri Garr.

One of the results of the business community's heightened interest in singles is video dating, which Youtan-Kay said has been rising in popularity. She recommends this method of dating, since she met her husband through a video dating service.

She explained that because she was able to screen her date and match his likes and dislikes with her own, "it felt like we (she and her husband) were on the fifth date when we were really only on the first."

Youtan-Kay gave some important advice for singles, saying that "sometimes there is an attitude of desperation . . . the most important thing is to work on yourself. Take time to ask yourself 'Who am I?' "

DEBATE UCLA 88

As the candidates clashed inside Pauley Pavilion Thursday, hundreds of protesters clashed outside.

Protests accompany debate

Dozens of groups rally outside Pavilion

By David Mori and Deborah Lopez
Staff Writers

While the audience inside UCLA's Pauley Pavilion Thursday night may have been considered too spirited for a presidential debate, their enthusiasm was mild compared to protests throughout the Westside that day.

Protests took place outside the Pavilion during the debate and at Loyola Marymount University, where Vice President George Bush attended a post-debate rally. Another demonstration started in Westwood earlier at noon to protest Bush's alleged involvement in the 1980 Iranian hostage crisis.

'Protesting silence'

Approximately 300 demonstrators from various groups protested policies of both Bush and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis as the two candidates faced each other inside the Pavilion.

Topics of the protesters at UCLA ranged from Dukakis' prison furlough program to AIDS and Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza.

Several members of ACT UP (AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power) chanted, "Act up, fight back, stop AIDS."

Senate nears passage of anti-drug bill

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate is rolling toward passage of a $2.6 billion, campaign-season drug bill that would dangle the possibility of the death penalty in front of many drug offenders who kill.

By a vote of 78-11, the chamber has approved an amendment that would allow judges to strip convicted users of illegal drugs of many federal benefits, including student loans, mortgage guarantees and licenses. The benefits could be halted for up to one year for a first conviction and for five years for additional convictions.

Lawmakers who feared earlier that the wide-ranging measure might be stillborn because of a torrent of more than 100 amendments began feeling more optimistic after a mixture of private bargaining sessions and floor debates eased several potential logjams.

Congress, which had hoped to adjourn for the year Friday, was expected to return this week to try to finish the measure.

Man libeled in assault accusation, says jury

The Associated Press

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — A jury has found that the group Women Against Rape libeled a man when it circulated a flier that falsely accused him of assaulting and attempting to rape a co-worker.

Steve Carney, who was never charged, was awarded $7,500 for pain and suffering and $25,000 in punitive damages by the seven-man, five-woman panel.

"I feel a lot better, but I can't say I really won because there may be people out there who saw it (the flier) and formed their own opinions," Carney, 23, said after hearing Thursday's verdict.

"(But) I think it will teach them to be a little more careful about what accusations they choose to print about people," he said.

Carney, of Scotts Valley, sued Women Against Rape (WAR) of Santa Cruz, claiming the group publicly humiliated him in a 1984 leaflet that named him as having assaulted and attempted to rape Karen Winkler, 24.

During a trial in Santa Cruz County Superior Court, it was brought out that Winkler never went to police and swore in a deposition that she didn't know what happened the night she went out drinking with Carney and another co-worker.

Representatives of WAR testified that they based the flier solely on Winkler's word and by observing her behavior, which they said was consistent with a profile of women who have been sexually assaulted.

Representatives of the organization earlier declined an offer from Carney's lawyer that the suit would be dropped in exchange for an apology and a retraction.

Deanne Pernell and Jan Shirchild, both WAR directors, said they would discuss an appeal with the organization's lawyers.

After less than a day of deliberations, the seven-man, five-woman jury found that Women Against Rape acted with "reckless disregard" for Carney's rights by publishing the accusation without any investigation, said jury Foreman Ken Fein.

"They (WAR) stated over and over again that the effect of the publication on Steve Carney was not considered. We found that to be wanton disregard for his rights," Fein said.

Arms contractor confesses to fraud charges

By James Litke
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The scams were so familiar that at times a federal prosecutor had to remind himself he was trailing a major defense contractor, and not just another small-time operator feeding at the public trough.

The fraud investigation of the Sundstrand Corp. revealed the destruction of memos and internal reports, creative accounting, favors paid to government officials, hidden ownership, even a charge to the government for personal expenses like golfing and dog kennel fees.

It was an easy path to follow for a federal prosecutor schooled in the shenanigans of Chicago's City Hall.

"I think as in most public corruption cases, the people at Sundstrand developed the attitude that these kinds of things were part of the cost of doing business," U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas said.

"They probably thought that prosecution would be too complex, or that the government wouldn't follow through . . . or that even if the company did get caught, it could settle up civilly.

"But we took the same approach we take in other corruption cases. And by the time you factor in the additional problems of criminal charges, it becomes so expensive that they won't even look at this kind of thing any more."

Sundstrand agreed on Wednesday to plead guilty to a four-count criminal complaint charging that it overbilled the Pentagon for airplane parts and to pay $115 million in fines and penalties, the largest fraud settlement ever.

The Defense Department accounts for 42 percent of Sundstrand's $1.4 billion in annual sales.

The company has declined to comment on the plea agreement, except to say it was a step toward putting the scandal behind it.

But the matter may be far from over. A federal grand jury is considering charges against Sundstrand employees. And there remains the possibility of further administrative fines against the Rockford-based company, and the suspension of its right to bid on future defense contracts.

The plea agreement revealed several separate schemes to defraud the government. It also indicated that improprieties climbed at least into the supervisory level and possibly higher.

Protesters denounce U.S. ties to Central America

By Keith Roberts
Contributor

A "Steps to Freedom" protest over American assistance to El Salvador took place in Westwood Saturday, with 39 protesters arrested for civil disobedience and trespassing on federal property.

The protest was organized by the Central American Coalition and is just one of such protests in 56 American cities, organizer Sheryl Roberts said. Roberts expected the group's planned blockade of the Pentagon in Washington D.C. today "to be the largest since the Vietnam war days."

About 900 people participated in Saturday's protest, marching from the Federal Building on Wilshire Blvd. westward to the National Guard Reserve Center near Federal Avenue.

At the Reserve Center, 39 protest leaders walked into the middle of a National Guard training exercise, and decorated the guardsmen and a fence they retreated behind with flowers.

Three hours later, after two police helicopters and 40 officers arrived at the scene, the protest leaders were arrested without incident.

The marchers on the streets chanted anti-Reagan slogans and carried signs denouncing U.S. Central American policy towards the civil-war torn countries of El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala.

The marchers maintained a party-like atmosphere through the two-hour march and two-hour standstill in front of the Reserve Center. Several protesters enacted bloody war scenes, dressed as Salvadoran soldiers and victims.

Most of the protesters were white, while across the street were 30 Central American refugees with a counter-protest, carrying signs like "Yes to Contra Aid," "Stop FMLN (a communist insurgency group)" and "Cuba out of Nicaragua."

When Central American Coalition member Anna Pomoska, a supporter of FMLN, crossed the street and blocked a "Viva la Contra" sign, the refugees called her a "stupid gringo," ripped her sign away and threw a cup of Gatorade on her.

Pomoska said the refugees "may have been paid by the C.I.A."

Minutes later, anti-FMLN protester Ben Davis had his sign, which read "More Lies from the Left," torn away and was thrown off the sidewalk by a group of six angry security people from the Coalition. Davis claimed Coalition members "are being duped."

One Salvadoran youth said the FMLN would make a better government than El Salvador President Jose Napoleon Duarte,

Alcoholic student turns his life around, sets an example

Editor's note: This column is based on actual events and persons. It is the first of two articles relating to National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week.

By Laurel Eu

Ron started out as an All-American swimmer and had an opportunity to go to the Olympics. He was also president of his fraternity.

But he missed his chance.

Ron's drinking started getting out of control during his college years. It was the beginning of his hitting the bottom.

School started getting in the way of his drinking. Ron missed practices and his grades went down. His life started going downhill — but Ron didn't care. All he cared about was his next drink.

Being president of the fraternity was like receiving a free charge card at the liquor store. Ron was in charge of the money used for parties. There was always a lot of drinking going on in the house.

During his senior year Ron got three "driving under the influence" citations. His fraternity brothers had to bail him out.

Each time Ron received a citation, he swore he wouldn't drink again, but the pull was too great. He hid behind his image as an All-American athlete so no one would know his life was falling apart.

After he graduated, he received his fifth driving citation, but he still continued to drive. He needed to, since his job as a fundraiser required it. Fundraising, which Ron described as "glorified partygoing," gave him a lot of excuses to drink.

During Christmas after Ron's graduation, his father died from the long-term effects of alcoholism. Ron thought that his father's death would turn him away from alcohol, but it didn't. To relieve his emotional trauma, he started smoking pot. Unfortunately the pot caused him to drink more.

"Many alcoholics/addicts will try to switch from one chemical to another thinking they will not get out of control with the new drug," said Cece Freeman, substance abuse prevention coordinator at Student Health Services. "Unfortunately, what happens is that they start abusing the new drug and eventually start using their previous ones."

Because of his use of both alcohol and marijuana, Ron felt that he was bad — a weak person. He "beat himself up" mentally. Ron couldn't seem to stop, but he did.

EXPO Center offers students local, national internships

By Susan C. Mills
Contributor

Editing the newest adventure films, preparing cases under brilliant lawyers and writing the evening news are extremely difficult jobs to obtain.

But UCLA's Extramural Programs and Opportunities (EXPO) Center has reorganized its Los Angeles Internship Program to better secure positions like these for its students.

"In the past, students could just walk in and ask for an L.A. internship and we would work with them," said Nghia Tran, the assistant director in charge of Los Angeles internships and alumni relations. "Now we want those students to go through a selection process just like the National Internship Program."

Applications will be reviewed and interviews will be conducted to determine which students are best suited for the local positions, he said.

The new internship program is not only restructuring its selection procedures, but expanding its job pool, as well.

"We are doing much more outreach to the Los Angeles community, whether it be in government, law, business, or the film industry, to advertise the availability of UCLA students," said Tran.

In the past, Los Angeles internships were especially popular among students who had participated in the EXPO Center's National Internship Program, but still some had time left before graduating.

"When our students return to L.A., most of them want to continue on this learning curve that they have started. They want to do some additional on-the-job training in Los Angeles while going to school," said Tran. "This program is a natural springboard to help these students prepare for graduation."

"The internships helped me to focus on what my career choices were," said Wendy Greuel, assistant to the Los Angeles Deputy Mayor. After internships in Washington, D.C. and Los Angeles, Greuel secured a position in Mayor Bradley's Office of Youth Development.

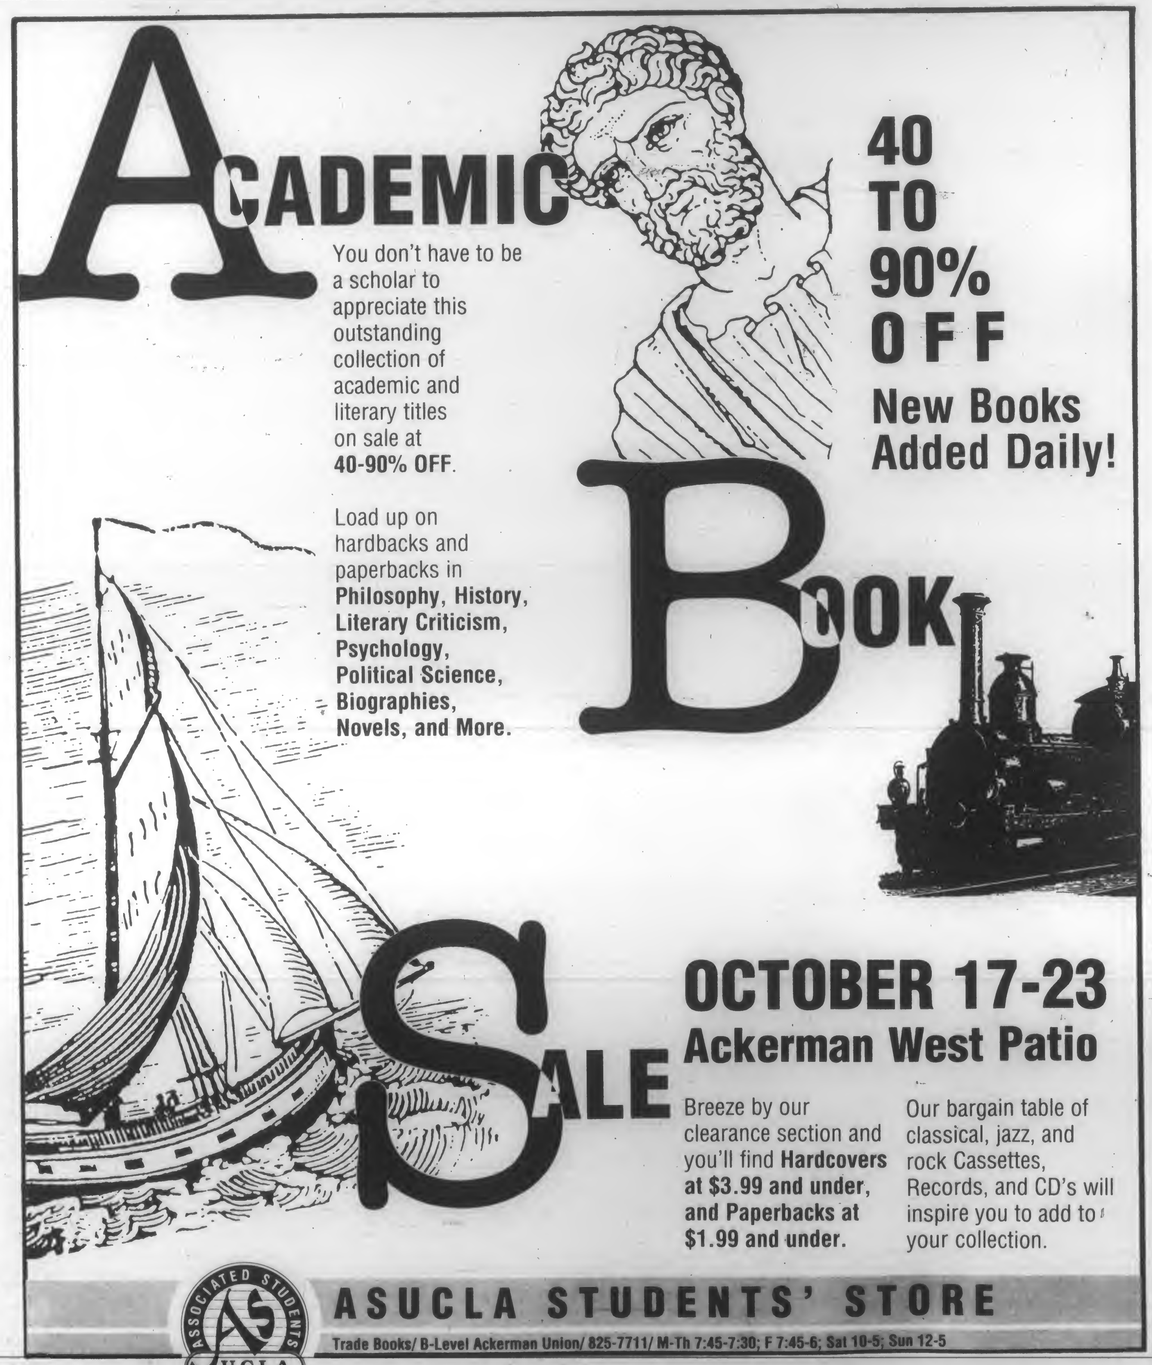
More than once has an internship flourished into a full-time job upon graduation.

"A lot of our alumni who went through our program did the internships and stayed with their jobs because they were talented and their employers could spot that, and requested them to stay," Tran said.

Whether it is to aid in making career choices or to gain valuable experience, the EXPO Center's Los Angeles Internship Program may be the answer.

"We want to foster the capabilities of the students and direct them on the right path where their talents can be used and where they will be happy," said Tran.

Applications for winter '89 internships are being accepted through today. For more information, call the EXPO Center at 825-0831.



Ex-senator angry with campaign tone

Goldwater urges candidates to talk issues, end name-calling

By Lawrence L. Knutson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former presidential candidate Barry Goldwater says George Bush may have "impugned the patriotism of Michael Dukakis" in a campaign he says has been so negative that "as an American citizen, I'm dammned concerned about where we're going."

He urged both Bush and Dukakis to "quit calling each other names" and concentrate on important issues, such as how they would handle the nation's huge debt and federal budget deficits.

In an interview, Goldwater, who retired two years ago as Arizona's senior Republican senator, said also he believes Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, has stronger qualifications to become president than does Bush's running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind.

But Goldwater also said of Bush: "I don't think I've known a man in my life who comes to the chance of being president who is better qualified."

He believes Bush will "win rather big," carrying half or more of the 50 states, and added: "I think I know generally what George Bush stands for. I'm very much for him. I think he'll make a good president."

While Goldwater said he was surprised by the choice of Quayle, he is "very prejudiced" in the 41-year-old senator's favor because he has known him and his family for years and thought Quayle did a "superb" job in handling a Senate Armed Services panel on military procurement.

Goldwater admitted that despite his closeness to Quayle, the question of whether the Hoosier senator is equipped to be president, should he ever be called on to do so, is an obvious one.

He said it is an impossible question to answer and raised the possibility that, like Harry Truman, Quayle might grow with the job, should it become necessary.

"I'll admit this," Goldwater volunteered. "The man running for vice president on the Democrat ticket is, I think, a little better equipped."

"I've known him longer," Goldwater said of Bentsen. "He's been in the Senate longer. And he's bound to have picked up many things that Quayle hasn't had a chance to pick up."

Goldwater, 79, said he is ready to return to Phoenix, having just sold the Washington apartment he occupied for decades. He is publicizing his new autobiography, "Goldwater," a tartly worded view of his life and the personalities with whom he has worked and clashed in a career which spanned four decades. Goldwater ran for president in 1964 against Lyndon Johnson.

In last week's debate, Bush said Goldwater couldn't know what the issues are because the press has not been reporting on them. Goldwater had asked Quayle to "tell George Bush to start talking about the issues."

Referring to both Both and Dukakis, Goldwater and said: "I think the whole campaign has been negative."

"I've been giving both candidates a bad time for this negative campaigning at a very, very important time in our history. . . .As an American citizen I'm just damned concerned about where we're going."

Goldwater was asked about Bush's attack on Dukakis for the governor's veto of legislation requiring all Massachusetts school children to recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

Calling the pledge a "very big part of Americana," Goldwater added: "I don't think it deserved spending more than one or two lectures on."

He said he was not able to respond with certainty to the question of whether Bush has impugned the integrity of Michael Dukakis.

But after a pause, he added: "I have a hunch that he probably has."

What does that say about the shape of American presidential politics?

"Bad shape," Goldwater replied. "It doesn't speak well for the political system. The American people do not like negative advertising or negative campaigning. They'd like to be told what's on these fellows' minds about how to get the country in order."

11-year-old reporter covers latest debate

The Associated Pres

Among the network anchors and Pulitzer-prize winning newspaper reporters covering the presidential debate was 11-year-old Alicia Sherman, who was reporting for her elementary school newsletter.

The sixth-grader from Topeka Drive Elementary School was in the press center at Pauley Pavilion here Oct. 13 covering the event for the Topeka Topic.

She was the only elementary school student to receive a special press credential from the Commission on Presidential Debates.

"We normally don't accredit elementary school newspapers," said Joe Keenan, a commission spokesman. "This was pretty much a special arrangement for her."

Alicia said she wanted a credential because she wouldn't be satisfied watching the debate at home. After her request was rejected by both the George Bush and Michael Dukakis campaigns, she had her mother pursue the commission for permission.

ASUCLA only banks with "clean banks"— that is, banks with no ties or investments in South Africa. We're pleased that so many banks qualify under the banking policy which ASUCLA's Board of Control adopted in December 1980. That means UCLA students get a real choice, and a choice that reflects our concerns about important issues such as U.S. ties to apartheid.

Minnesota students riot for 2nd night

The Associated Press

ST. CLOUD, Minn. — Hundreds of rioting students burned furniture and clashed with police in a second night of homecoming weekend violence that resulted in 50 arrests by officers clad in riot gear, police said Sunday.

At least six people, including a police officer and a person found in a trash carrier, were treated at a hospital for minor injuries suffered Saturday night and early Sunday, said hospital nursing supervisor Patricia Anderson.

As many as 1,500 St. Cloud State University students were involved in the rioting in a four-block area on Friday and Saturday nights, Assistant Police Chief Jim Moline said.

Students set off firecrackers and some played the Beatles' song "Revolution" on a stereo as police swept through the crowd, estimated at about 700 people Saturday night. Other people tore down street signs and jumped on cars, or threw beer bottles and pieces of lumber.

About 60 officers, including some from the State Patrol and neighboring counties, shot tear gas to disperse the crowd and made 46 arrests, most on misdemeanor charges of unlawful conduct or criminal damage to property, Moline said.

After a lull of a few hours, 150 officers were sent in early Sunday to break up crowds of 150 to 200 people, some of whom had set fire to furniture and a trash carrier that had been dragged into the street, Moline said.

"It's like a battle between the police and the students," said Karen Jacobs, the managing editor of the student newspaper, the University Chronicle, who watched the disturbance from her dormitory room.

The riots broke out in the midst of homecoming celebrations by the school's 16,400 students. Witnesses said the problems began when officers tried to break up loud parties and fights.

Moline said that in his years on the police force, the weekend's violence could be topped only by demonstrations against the Vietnam War in the 1960s.

Student Randy Ridenour, 23, of Minneapolis said officers backed off several times Saturday night to avoid a potentially disastrous confrontation.

"It was mob mentality," he said.

Many people had been drinking heavily and were enjoying the havoc, he said. "A lot of kids thought they were being cool and funny. The students were acting stupid."

Some of the handful of people arrested Friday night probably will be charged with felony assault for throwing beer bottles, and the arrests Sunday morning will result in several more misdemeanor charges, Moline said. Thirty-four of the 50 people arrested were university students.

University President Brendan McDonald said he would appoint a task force to investigate the violence and met with school officials to discuss the situation further.

Dukakis seeks final comeback message

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press

Time is running short for Michael Dukakis, and the Democratic presidential nominee still is searching for a message that will attract voters in his faltering battle against Republican George Bush.

With just over three weeks left until Election Day, Dukakis was trailing in the polls and Bush appeared to have gained ground in the final presidential campaign debate.

"One of the things I have to do, obviously, is give people a better sense of who Mike Dukakis is," the candidate told reporters on his campaign plane Friday.

It seemed a remarkable admission from a politician who has been campaigning for president for the past 18 months.

"I'm expecting to win," he said. "But I think it's going to be very tight and I've always felt that way."

There were large signs and small that the campaign was feverishly looking for ways to turn the tide.

A bit of advice came right after the Thursday debate, an encounter that was clearly a disappointment to the Democratic campaign.

Dukakis' vice presidential running mate Lloyd Bentsen called and gave him a pep talk.

The Texas senator advised the presidential nominee that it was time to get out and campaign "flat out" until Election Day.

Bentsen has emerged as the Dukakis campaign's greatest asset with a large majority of voters saying they prefer him to GOP vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle.

Jibes at Quayle remain standard parts of Dukakis and Bentsen campaign speeches.

The value Dukakis places on Bentsen was seen by the fact that right after the debate, the Texas senator flew to California for a joint appearance with the Massachusetts governor.

The first signs of change in campaign approach were a new pair of commercials that were very different stylistically from the often sharp-edged ads he had run before.

The new national Dukakis commercials are designed to deal with a perception that he is cold and heartless. In one, Dukakis is in short sleeves and sitting on a couch.

"It's been a few years since Kitty and I had children in school," he says.

Then after referring to challenges facing young couples today, he concludes, "I'd want my president to be in touch with the things that are important to me and my family."

Aides also said every opportunity would be used to get the candidate before large television audiences. He is ready and eager, for example, to appear on such programs as ABC's "Nightline."

"Our best messenger is our candidate," said deputy campaign chairman John Sasso.

'DOCTORS:' Analysis

"Spin doctors pick up on the strongest part of their candidate's performance," explained John Zaller, UCLA assistant professor of political science.

Although no spinner would ever admit to pre-formulating the spin and to strongly supporting one candidate while denouncing the other, the media has become increasingly skeptical of these media medics.

"I like that the press is exposing the media manipulation of both parties . . . the spin doctors are paid liars," said UCLA speech coach Tom Miller. "These people are looking media in the eye and saying things that even the most uneducated person knows are false.

"(They are) the central fraud of this whole election," he continued. "We have image-makers projecting phony images, manipulating the public — and this is what is electing our candidates and deciding our future."

Senator Al Gore, D-Tenn., who was himself a contender for the Democratic presidential nomination, was on hand in the media center one hour before the debate began, offering "analysis" of Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis.

"So far it's 2-0 . . . This is an opportunity for the American people to hear the issues in this campaign," Gore boasted.

"And what are those?" interrupted one reporter. Receiving no answer, the reporter persisted, "What's the spin?"

"This is analysis," Gore said.

"What's wrong with 'spin'?" other journalists prodded, to which Gore replied, "There are wrong connotations of the word 'spin.' "

Gore insisted that he would only offer "post-debate analysis," which he said was "a step above spinning."

He told skeptical reporters that he would "calculate the debate points, and give an objective read-out."

Vice President George Bush had his own workers out for the spin. Jim Lake — a Republican "dating back to the Reagan days," according to one media member — said "George Bush will continue as he did in the first debate — to show Dukakis as a liberal."

Showing more than a little cynicism, two journalists discussed the spinning process. "All the Republicans will say Bush won, and all the Democrats will say Dukakis made good points. It's funny," reporter said.

Joseph Cerrell, a Los Angeles spin doctor, said he took notes on the key points of the debate, holding up a small scrap of paper containing his analysis.

Cerrell said he had been talking to the media since the afternoon, giving his spin for Dukakis to the New York and Washington bureaus of ABC, the San Diego Union and various radio stations. He added that he also spun for the Bentsen-Quayle vice-presidential debate in Omaha.

Meanwhile, the Bush spinners were pitching for their own candidate. "It was a grand slam," said one Bush campaign staffer.

Another added, "The vice president was the clear winner. The debate did exactly what he wanted. It set forth his issues, his values, and the differences in this campaign."

Senator Alan Cranston, D-Calif., offered his own post-debate interpretation. "I thought Michael Dukakis did very, very well. He showed warmth and a knowledge of issues.

"Dukakis won on Supreme Court, abortion . . . (and) social security. He scored points. Dukakis didn't need a knock-out punch," he added.

But a Bush campaign staffer gave a radically different spin, "Dukakis got his clock cleaned. Bush clearly won."

The clarity of Bush's alleged victory was not so obvious to Gore. "Gov. Dukakis is a clear winner. Now the score is 3-0. He demolished labels (and) projected tremendous warmth," he said.

Warmth was a common thread tying together the analyses of the Dukakis spin doctors.

"Mike Dukakis came across as a warm guy, incredibly knowledgeable, (with) clear facts," said one Dukakis campaign staffer.

CBS Television journalist Leslie Stahl, however, challenged the doctoring of the Dukakis staffers.

"You have defined him instead of him giving his own self-definition," she told one Dukakis spin doctor.

Altogether, Dukakis spin doctors seemed to be more numerous and to be making more of an effort to reach the media.

Miller characterized the spin doctors' commentary as "pseudo information."

Zaller opined, "Before, (spin doctoring) was done informally. (Now) the business of the spin doctor has become institutionalized."

Regardless of the mind-set of the "spin patients," the spin doctors seem destined to continue their perpetual whirling in the political ring.

DEBATE '88 UCLA

RALLIES: Pavilion unrest

"We're here to stop AIDS and ignorance. We are protesting against silence. We are in the middle of one of the biggest epidemics and none of the candidates is offering solutions to the problems," said supporter Wendell Jones.

A scuffle broke out between members of ACT UP and two self-proclaimed Bush supporters, one of whom said he was here because "homosexuals and liberals were here."

At the same time, supporters carrying ACT signs began to taunt the Bush supporters by shouting, "KKK" and "fascists."

A remark from a second Bush supporter regarding gays' sexual practices prompted a shoving match between members of the groups. Several seconds later, they backed away from each other before anyone was injured.

Wearing black-and-white, striped prison outfits, John Fleishman, executive director for Young Americans for Freedom, said there were 56 members of the organization present to support Bush.

Fleischman said the members represented the 56 prisoners who are unaccounted for in Dukakis' prison furlough program. "We are here to protest liberal scum Michael Dukakis. The man has not the right to think he can lead a nation. He can't even lead a state."

The vice president was also not immune to protests. Nelson Schwartz said he wants "the American people to know that in October 1980, George Bush gave Iran $40 billion and promised $5 billion in arms to not release the hostage until after the elections."

Another organization, the Palestine Solidarity Committee, carried protest signs which read, "Stop U.S. aid to the Israeli Occupation in the West Bank and Gaza now."

Committee member Michel Shehadeah described the candidates' stance on the Middle East issue as "not good. The United States has the leverage to demand and pressure Israel into leaving the Gaza and the West Bank. Whoever wins must recognize the Palestinians' demands and support them."

Warrior Woman, a member of an Indian and Chicano organization, said her group, For Direction, opposes Dukakis and Bush's policies regarding Chicanos and Indians. "We are not invisible people. We've been here for 500 years and in 200 years, and no one has helped the Chicano and Indian people."

Supporters of Dr. Lenora Fulani, an Independent presidential candidate on the November ballot said Fulani should be allowed to participate in the debates. "It's a question of race and free elections," one supporter said.

B. Kwaku Duren, her vice presidential candidate, said, "the debates are a farce. It's a question of protecting the two-party system and not allowing anyone who has the potential for breaking that up."

According to security officers, no demonstrator outside the Pavilion tried to get passed the guards, and no security personnel were needed to break up any scuffles.

Protests continued after the debate at Loyola Marymount University, where pro-Bush students and Dukakis supporters engaged in shouting matches.

As they awaited Bush's arrival to a campus rally, the Concerned Students of the Democratic Society of Loyola Marymount said they were demonstrating to inform the campus about Dukakis. LMU student Marjorie Pennington said they were also upset because administrators allegedly would not let Dukakis visit the campus earlier in the year.

Pro-Bush students from LMU and UCLA only waved signs to counter the demonstrators, and no violence or injuries were reported.

A group of people calling themselves, "The October Surprise, Truth Committee," gathered outside the Federal Building at noon Thursday to expose Vice President George Bush's alleged negotiation with the Iranian kidnapers of 52 Americans in October 1980.

Protesters claimed Bush and others from the 1980 Reagan/Bush campaign committee met with Iranian officials, and arranged for the release of the American hostages to be delayed until Reagan was sworn into office.

The Iranians were in turn allegedly paid $40 million in cash plus $5 billion in arms.

Information on Bush's involvement in the Iranian hostage crisis was obtained from a testimony made by former CIA contractor Richard Brenneke on Sept. 23, 1988 at the Chambers of U.S. Federal District Court Judge Jim Carrigan in Denver, Colo.

According to Brenneke's testimony, he was part of a contingent of Americans who attended a series of meetings to arrange and delay the release of the American hostages.

The group of nine men and women stood on the lawn of the Federal Building wearing yellow ribbons around their arms and white bandages over their eyes.

They held a sign that read, "October 1988, Bush cut a deal to delay the release of 52 American hostages."

According to group organizer Bob Dorff, the demonstrators were made up of "friends calling friends. We are an ad hoc group, formed in the last couple of weeks to expose Bush's involvement in the 1980 Iranian hostage crisis.

The demonstrators were students, professionals, writers and artists.

Most of the demonstrators became aware of the 1980 Reagan/Bush campaign activities after watching a documentary titled, "Cover Up," in which Barbara Honniger, a former Reagan staff employee, describes the Reagan/Bush campaign activities during the month before the 1980 elections.

Ex-professor charged again in Edison case

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A former Stanford University professor has been released on bond after being charged again with selling items taken from the Thomas Alva Edison museum in West Orange, N.J.

Phillip B. Petersen, 67, of Redwood City, surrendered in federal court and was released on $25,000 personal bond.

He was charged in a criminal complaint with concealing and selling documents valued at more than $5,000.

Petersen pleaded guilty to a similar charge in 1986 after 33 boxes of documents and artifacts worth about $200,000 were found in his home.

He visited the Edison museum to do research several times in 1976, the year the documents were discovered to be missing, the FBI said.

Petersen was not charged with theft because of the five-year statute of limitations on federal theft cases.

He was sentenced to four months in prison and ordered to turn over the documents, but he apparently decided to hold onto some items, according to a complaint filed in U.S. District Court in New Jersey on October 7.

Collector Neil Maken cooperated with the FBI and bought 27 documents from Petersen, the complaint said. The items included at least five from the Edison museum.

Petersen is a former director of the Stanford Language Laboratory. He was fired by the school in March 1977 after he was arrested on charges of embezzling more than $62,000 from a university petty cash fund. He was sentenced to one year in jail after pleading no contest.

Baseball-crazed Nicaraguans cheer on L.A. Dodgers

By Eloy O. Aguilar
Associated Press

'Baseball defeated the ideologies.'
— La Prensa Sports Editor

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Washington and Managua may be at odds, but how important can that be when the Los Angeles Dodgers — described here admiringly as "a bunch of guerrillas" — have made it to the World Series?

Come October, "beisbol"-crazed Nicaraguans think more about the arms in the bullpen than the arms to the Contras.

"Baseball defeated the ideologies," said Juan Navarro, sports editor of the opposition daily La Prensa.

Hundreds of Nicaraguans packed bars at tourist hotels during the American and National League playoffs, paying about $14 — almost the equivalent of a monthly minimum wage — for three drinks and the right to sit and watch satellite transmissions on a large screen.

When the New York Mets' Howard Johnson looked at a called third strike from the Orel Hershiser on Wednesday night to end the National League playoffs, Nicaraguans shouted approval in sympathy with the underdog.

"Latins have always liked the Dodgers because the Dodgers have always had Latin players," Navarro said. "Besides, they always played the Yankees."

The regular anti-U.S. tone of newspapers changes during the postseason play in "El Norte."

Barricada, the government newspaper, had a one-word headline to explain the the Dodgers' triumph: "Guts."

Barricada sports editor Edgardo Tijerino wrote that the win over the Mets by Tommy Lasorda's gang "ratifies the greatness of baseball where everything is possible, including having an apparent flyweight beat a heavyweight."

Local columnists write about the Dodgers, Mets, Athletics and Red Sox with authority.

One writer, reflecting on a subject Nicaraguans are familiar with, called the Dodgers "a bunch of guerrillas."

The Sandinista government started as a guerrilla movement that overthrew dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979; since then, the United States has supported Contra guerrillas who want to overthrow the Sandinistas.

Baseball arrived in Nicaragua in 1891 and grew in the early part of the century, boosted by the presence for many years of the Marines during the many U.S. interventions in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua has hundreds of amateur teams and an organized national baseball league. The championship in April pitted a team from the English-speaking and often rebellious east coast against a Sandinista army team from the capital of Managua. The army team, supported by members of the Sandinista party directorate, came back from a 3-1 deficit to win in seven.

Baseball fanaticism doesn't stop at the border. Only last month a U.S. philanthropist delivered a load of vital supplies to Nicaraguan refugees who have fled to Honduras: bats, balls and gloves.

Several Nicaraguans have made it to the majors; the best known currently is pitcher Dennis Martinez of the Montreal Expos.

An economic crisis and a U.S. embargo make seeing the playoffs in Nicaragua difficult, but not impossible. International hotels pick up the television picture with satellite dishes for their closed circuit transmissions.

Chinese, U.S. experts unsure over solution to save panda

By Kathy Wilhelm
Associated Press

WOLONG, China — Scientists and conservationists who rallied to save the rare giant panda when its favorite food ran out are sharply divided over what to do next.

The World Wildlife Fund, a conservation group and China's main foreign partner in panda research, recently turned to the U.S. Courts to determine if Chinese panda loans to American zoos are exploitative, as it says, or educational, as China says.

Some Chinese and Western experts say China should do more to breed captive pandas, while others say the only solution is to move humans from panda reserves.

Even the size of the panda population is under debate. The World Wildlife Fund is prepared to release survey results that put the number of pandas in the wild at 1,100 to 1,500, startlingly higher than previous estimates.

A 1977 Chinese survey put the figure at 1,000, and the population is known to have dropped since then due to poaching and a shortage of the panda's favorite food, bamboo.

Ken Johnson, a University of Tennessee zoologist who led the survey, says the earlier count was sloppy and too conservative.

But Zhou Shoude, the deputy director of China's largest panda reserve, the 800-square-mile Wolong Nature Reserve near Chengdu in Southwestern China, discounted Johnson's figures, which were based largely on a count of panda nesting areas and droppings.

The experts agree, however, that the panda is steadily decreasing in number and that five years after an international alert went out to save it, the outlook is grim.

"There are more pandas than we expected," Johnson says, "but they are more critically endangered than we expected."

Pandas, black-and-white bear-like animals that some say are related to the bear and some say to the raccoon, are native only to China. Experts believe their ancestors lived 20 million years ago, contemporaries of the mastodon and other extinct species.

A few hundred years ago, pandas still roamed the lowlands. But humans gradually pushed them into the mountains of western China's Sichuan, Gansu and Shaanxi provinces, the only places they now live in the wild.

World attention was drawn to their plight in 1983 when their dietary staple, arrow bamboo, flowered as it does every 40 or more years. The World Wildlife Fund collected more than $4.1 million toward saving the animal, and the Chinese government and citizens contributed millions more.

More than 62 animals starved before the bamboo began growing again a few years later.

That crisis over, experts are looking more critically at China's conservation program. They acknowledge China's limited resources, praise its good intentions and press for more action — without agreeing on the best course.

"Except for the pandas, there's not a lot that's black and

More than 100 ralliers arrested decrying U.S.'s El Salvador role

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — More than 100 people protesting U.S. involvement in El Salvador were arrested Saturday near the entrance of the Presidio, police said.

The arrests near the Army base occurred after about 300 demonstrators who marched from Fisherman's Wharf sat down in the street and ignored police orders to move to the sidewalks, police said. Those arrested were booked for investigation of obstructing traffic.

The sit-down protest followed a "walk-a-thon" in which more than 1,500 sought to raise $250,000 in private humanitarian aid for El Salvador. The march, which began at the Longshoreman's Hall, moved past crowds assembled at Marina Green for Fleet Week activities before reaching the Presidio.

Outside the entrance of the Army base, some demonstrators set up shanties, which were intended to represent the plight of Salvadoran refugees uprooted by right-wing death squads, said Arturo Sosa, a member of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, or CISPES. Police quickly removed the shanties.

The Presidio was targeted for the protest because it is the headquarters for the U.S. 6th Army, which would be in charge of any maneuvers in Central America, said Eric Riley, a member of CISPES.

Police Sgt. Jerry Senkir said police offered last week to meet with CISPES and other groups to make arrangements for an orderly demonstration but that the department received no response.

a Christian Democrat, and the newly elected ARENA, or the National Republican Alliance, party.

The youth was with his four-year-old brother who was missing an arm from what he said was a Salvadoran government bombing. He would not give his name because he claimed to be an illegal immigrant and the U.S. government does not give political asylum to El Salvadoran refugees.

The U.S. government has recently been cracking down on Central American refugees, deporting those without immigration papers, a point which was echoed throughout Saturday's protest.

ARENA is the right wing party in El Salvador that wants to step up the war against FMLN, and end a low-intensity conflict plan which the White House has allegedly pressure President Duarte to adopt, ARENA party officials have said.

white about it," Ken Cook, a spokesman for the World Wildlife Fund, said in a telephone interview from Washington.

China is dealing sternly with one obvious problem — poaching. Its highest court last year ordered panda killers be given long prison terms or even the death sentence.

China has been less decisive, however, in dealing with another human problem — ordinary peasants. Their encroachment on the rare animal's turf, including inside China's 12 panda reserves, advances steadily.

More than 4,000 peasants live in Wolong, which became a showcase for panda conservation in 1980 when the World Wildlife Fund helped build a breeding center there. The peasants' terraced corn and potato crops climb high up the slopes of mountains roamed by pandas.

Johnson believes the peasants must be moved — if not from Wolong, then from other reserves.

"They've already destroyed Wolong, essentially," he says. Human settlements have marooned the pandas in small groups on mountain tops, preventing them from mingling in the mating season and creating the danger of localized inbreeding, he says.

Johnson's solution is to move humans from critical areas and plant corridors of trees and bamboo between panda habitats so they can roam freely and mate naturally — something he said pandas have no trouble doing in the wild.

Wolong's deputy director, Zhou, says he tries to "educate" the peasants in the hope they will leave voluntarily, but he has no fallback plan if they don't.

Johnson dismissed breeding centers, artificial reproduction and Chinese efforts to develop test-tube pandas, saying, "We don't have that much time."

However, other scientists believe wild pandas cannot be saved in adequate numbers, and that breeding centers are needed to re-populate the forests. Here, too, China's program falls short.

"You need one person who knows exactly where all the pandas are and their histories," says Devra Kleiman, assistant director of research at Washington's National Zoo.

Captive pandas, kept mainly in pairs in zoos, should instead be kept in large breeding centers where they would have greater chances of finding compatible mates, she says. At a minimum, she adds, zoos should cooperate in breeding their pandas.

William Conway, director of the New York Zoological Society and designer of the Wolong breeding center, agreed on the need for two or three national breeding centers where pandas could be carefully managed in an accelerated propagation program.

But Chinese zoos cooperate little. The Forestry Ministry, in charge of conservation, said it does not even keep count of how many pandas are in captivity in China. Official media reports say there are more than 80.

Wolong, with eight captive pandas, puts males and females together only during the brief spring mating season, as do many zoos. Then, relative strangers and unable to act out their elaborate mating rituals of the wild, the pandas are notoriously uninterested in romance.

According to Chinese count,

See PANDAS, Page 19

Pandas

captive pandas worldwide have produced fewer than three dozen surviving cubs.

"I don't think anyone is pleased with the progress that has been made in captive breeding," Cook says. He said the fund was disappointed that the breeding facility it helped build in Wolong had only produced one panda, born in 1986.

Wang Menghu of the Forestry Ministry says breeding has suffered from too little equipment and trained staff.

But he says China's efforts compared well with other countries, noting that few Western zoos with pandas have been able to produce surviving offspring.

It was breeding and money that dragged the panda into the U.S. Courts.

In a suit still pending, the World Wildlife Fund and American Association of Zoological Parks and Museums accused the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service of allowing commercial exploitation of pandas on loan to U.S. zoos from China.

Six U.S. zoos have borrowed separate pairs of pandas for short periods, paying China up to $500,000 and in turn reaping millions in ticket and concession sales. Dozens of other zoos are hotly competing for pandas.

"Our concern was that the number of loans was increasing sharply," Cook says. The lawsuit failed to stop the loan of two Wolong pandas to the Toledo, Ohio, zoo in May. However, the Fish and Wildlife Service refused to let another panda pair be shown at the Michigan State Fair, saying it would disrupt their breeding in China.

It also suspended consideration of future panda loans, including one planned for the Atlanta Zoo for September, while it works out a new policy. Among other things, the service said it wants proof China uses the fees it gets for conservation.

China's government has not responded, but its Association of Zoological Gardens announced a ban on panda loans where foreign organizations might profit, implying the commercialism was on the other side.

Proposition

quires local governments to raise too much property taxes.

The proposed constitutional amendment would prevent redevelopment agencies from automatically being given a share of any property tax increases for bonds.

"Proposition 87 will assure that any new property taxes approved for bonds will be used only for the purposes intended by the voters," say the ballot arguments favoring the measure. Those were written by Assemblyman Jack O'Connell, D-Santa Barbara; Richard Simpson of the California Taxpayers Association and Bob Epple of Norwalk, Democratic candidate for the 63rd Assembly District.

Redevelopment agencies are formed by local governments to eliminate blight and promote economic growth, usually in decaying urban areas. Redevelopment agencies generally receive most of the increased property tax revenues resulting from increased property values due to the redevelopment projects.

Current law requires local governments that increase their property tax rate to pay off general obligation bonds.

Alcoholism

The pivotal event of his life was a tragedy suffered by one of his teammates, Mike. Ron described Mike as an excellent swimmer, a "perfect guy," from a great family.

Mike was involved in a motorcycle accident and was paralyzed from the waist down. Ron felt terrible for Mike, thinking that the accident should have happened to himself and not to Mike.

Ron went to visit Mike at the hospital. During his visit, Ron was struck with the feeling that it was the bottom — like Mike's physical bottom. He admitted his drinking problem to Mike and explained that he might have to serve time in jail, go to a hospital and enter a therapy program.

"You need to drive again," Ron told Mike. "I've got to get you a special van so you can drive."

Ron's predictions came to pass. He served time in jail, spent 28 days as an inpatient in a hospital treatment program and attended a year-long therapy program for half a day each week. He continues to attend Alcoholics Anonymous meetings. He believes his life has turned around.

"Life is so much better, now that I'm sober," Ron says. "I don't have that craziness, insanity and worthless feeling that goes along with being an alcoholic."

Ron organized a "Swim for Mike" drive where Olympic and World-class athletes would swim laps to raise money for Mike's van. "Swim for Mike" has been successful, not only providing a van for Mike, but for enabling 12 disabled athletes to continue with school.

In addition to earning the money for the van, these swim events provided Ron with a symbol of a constructive sobriety.

Keenan agreed, but kept his decision secret because he didn't want to be inundated with requests from elementary school kids.

"It's so neat," Alicia said while sitting in the press section. "It's nothing like I imagined it watching it on TV."

During the debate Alicia jotted down comments by the candidates, which will be used for a story for her school paper.

"I wanted to be there," she said. "I wanted to see how the press covers the debate."

Alicia, who is running for student body president, plans to major in political science at Harvard and wants to be president of the United States, said more children should have access to the adult world of politics. She also wants the voting age lowered.

"Kids need to be more involved in things like this," she said, "because someday we'll be running the world."

cited the Bill of Rights as an example of a "liberating tradition" because it acknowledges the rights of human beings.

"(Republicans and conservatives) want to keep us small. They misread our future (by saying) civil liberties are subversive, civil rights are unconstitutional, women's rights are ill-timed, workers' rights are not good. My friends, we deserve better leadership than that."

"Liberty is broader than politics," Jackson said. The famous statue in New York is "not a statue of Democrats and not a statue of Republicans," he continued, "It's a statue of liberty."

The United States is not "the land of the rich, home of the scared but the land of the free and home of the brave."

The Bruin Democrats and Students for Jackson sponsored the rally and managed to organize it within only two day's notice, although they invited Jackson much earlier.

However, Albert Robles, a member of the Bruin Democrats, stressed it was the collective effort of many groups such as the Rainbow Coalition, Black Student Alliance, Asian Pacific Coalition, MEChA, and Samahang Pilipino as well as the cooperation of the university which made the event a success.

"It was by far the biggest crowd I've ever seen in Westwood Plaza since it was invented," said Robert Ringler, UCLA's principal of student affairs in the Center for Student Programming Office.

"He's just the most inspirational person I've ever heard speak in my entire life . . . I was overcome with emotion. I never had a day with so much hope," said Florencia Aranovich, the Undergraduate Students Association academic affairs commissioner.

"(Jackson's) message transcends political boundaries," senior Allison Hunter said.

The visible support from the audience was great, said Ryan Whetstone, vice chair of The Black Students Alliance. But "we have to see if the support holds up. Everyone needs to go out and vote."

To the UCLA undergraduate, Youtan-Kay suggests taking "advantage of this large (campus) population" which offers many opportunities for meeting people. She said that upon entering the work force, it might be harder to meet someone who is compatible.

Most importantly, because there is no longer a stigma attached to being single, Youtan-Kay suggests that the single person "live life to its fullest."

Each week, the Staff and Faculty Service Center (SFSC) presents a lecture in its "Learn-At-Lunch" series. SFSC is a UCLA employees' assistance program that provides free consultation to all staff and faculty on work-related concerns. SFSC recently established the UCLA Single's Support Network. THE UCLA HELPLINE

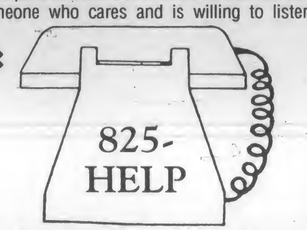
Founded in 1971, the UCLA Helpline was developed to serve both the campus and surrounding community as a crisis-intervention, general information, and referral hotline.
Helpline exists as a tool for callers working through various difficulties. Therefore, it operates with a non-judgemental attitude in a highly confidential setting.

Not all people have life threatening troubles. They may be very lonely, frustrated, depressed, stressed by school pressures, or have roommate or relationship difficulties. The purpose of Helpline is to offer guidance and support when other services on campus are closed. Helpline allows callers to share their concerns with someone who cares and is willing to listen.

Call:



Monday through Friday, 5:00 pm to 12:00 midnight
Saturday and Sunday, 8:00 pm to 12:00 midnight

HOW TO GET INVOLVED

HELPLINE TRAINING

Helpline counselors are a carefully selected group of volunteer UCLA students, faculty, and staff members who have been specially trained to handle the diversity of calls which the line receives. The outcome of this extensive training is a cohesive group of sensitive, committed people who act as guides and supports to individuals calling for help and counseling.

Training will be held:
Tuesday, October 18
6:00 pm to 10:00 pm
Center for Health Sciences
Room 63-105

Memories don't fade

The UCLA community will forever remember the Presidential Debate held on campus last Thursday. Vice President George Bush and Governor Michael S. Dukakis squared off in Pauley Pavilion for the final debate of the '88 campaign. The media were here; the leaders of our country came here; the eyes of the nation, even the world, focused on the UCLA campus: History was in the making.

But our immediate reaction to the event is somewhat bitter. The campus feels cheated because the event, held at a public university, was private. UCLA students, many of whom will be the future leaders of America, were angry. The Commission on Presidential Debates denied them entrance to an event that will be so much a part of their lives, since most of us will enter the workforce under the next president. Some students pointed out that the event may as well have been broadcast from a television studio, since the debate was, according to the Commission on Presidential Debates' Janet Brown, a "Television event, not an audience event."

And Ms. Brown couldn't have been further from the truth. The event was as poorly scripted as a bad television western. The debate's safe, rigid format allowed each candidate to run from any intense discussion of the issues. Both candidates, thoroughly programmed, shot off their facts and attacks as fast as they could pull the trigger. There was no debate. Each candidate twisted the questions and began unrelated diatribes which were nothing more than two-minute speeches for the presidency. The candidates rarely rebutted their opponent's claims — that one-minute grace was saved for some one liners.

It's no wonder why the general population would rather watch "ALF" than hear George Bush complain about rotting fish. Americans know that the debates are a complete charade; the face to face exchanges have become a cheap way for the candidates to get national exposure with relative safety. They don't have to defend against their opponents, they have to defend against themselves.

While we are proud that UCLA was the site for the last presidential debate, we have reservations about the manner in which debates are conducted. Debates do not have to be public performances, but we would like to see more sparring over the issues, and we would appreciate it if the candidates answered their questions.

Years from now students will recall the general excitement on campus last week. It's too bad memories of the debate itself won't be so golden.

'Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy'

By Jonathan Congdon

Apparently some of the analysts and reporters who covered the Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen debate did not see the same event I did. Perhaps they fear being so caustic as to report the frightening truth that was revealed to our nation the evening of October 5th.

Dan Quayle's "performance" made it painfully clear how far someone with money, looks and virtually nothing else can go in this country. Senator Quayle admitted he has never been more than an average student, but that it is "what you do with your life" that matters. Well, to a certain extent his assertion is correct, but when this "average" person has the potential to become the Chief Executive Officer and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the United States of America, I think that is where his achievements should stop and our survival should begin. I would not want Senator Quayle to balance my checkbook — let alone our national budget.

Senator Quayle seemed baffled when he received the most predictable question of the night, "What would you do if you suddenly had to take charge and lead this nation"? After expressing surprise at a question which any vice-presidential nominee should have faced by now, Senator Quayle stated that he would first say a prayer and then "talk" to his (the president's) people. After that, he provided a scripted answer that did not apply. The panelist was so dumbstruck at the Senator's inability to answer that he actually asked the question again. Again, Senator Quayle could think of nothing, except that he would know the President's "cabinet members on a first name basis".

Actually, this question was one that could have and should have been handled easily, getting the debate off Quayle and on to other issues. All we really wanted was a sense that the Vice President could undertake the items on the executive agenda, meeting with the Joint Chiefs of Staff regarding what needed to be done immediately, thereby ensuring continuity and reassuring the American people and the rest of the world. Instead, his complete inability to think on his feet convinced me that if he were forced to take over the presidency, I too would be praying.

No one would ever buy an automobile or a home without some sort of insurance policy. Should there be an accident or fire, one can then fix the car or rebuild the home. Why then would anyone be inclined to vote for George Bush, knowing that if he wins, Dan Quayle has a 50 percent chance of becoming the president of our country?

Debate organizers should realize that students have political clout

By Susan Rinderle

Bruins clearly expressed all last week that they felt invaded by the existence of the presidential debate on campus; an event to which they were cordially uninvited. I agreed, however, I was not willing to accept the idea that we were being "used" until the night actually arrived.

All week we tolerated the scrutiny of the "men in three piece suits talking to their sleeves," and the idea that Bruin Walk, UCLA's main pedestrian thoroughfare, would be closed during the latter part of Thursday. Exhilarated after watching the debate on television (ironically), a few of my fellow dorm residents and I headed for Pauley Pavilion to catch some post-debate action. Our excitement was promptly doused, however, by policemen who only paid attention to us when we attempted to cross the street, and met reasonable questions with condescending remarks.

Nevertheless, what stood out in my mind was the aloof, high-minded attitude of many of the media groups present. Most just ignored the students and positioned themselves away from us, but there was at least one case of displayed rudeness. I was among those behind the ABC reporter broadcasting live on the eight o'clock news outside Pauley Pavilion. We expressed some non-riotous enthusiasm and engaged in the traditional UCLA "eight clap". After the newscaster was off the air, he walked close up to the people behind him, demanding to know who "the loudest ones" were, and that they "really pissed him off." Sure, we students were a little boisterous, but that was an unnecessary reaction, especially for an "adult" dealing with other "adults".

The trek down the hill was well worth any setbacks however. Tom Brokaw smiled and shook students' hands as he headed back to his trailer. Dan Rather was also very cordial. In addition, George and Barbara Bush and their entourage passed the dorms, heading north to the post-debate bash at Loyola Marymount University and had the lights in their limosines turned on so we could see the Vice President and his wife waving to the few of us gathered on the street.

There has been a tremendous campaign this year to register new voters, especially the young ones like myself, just recently coming of voting age. My point is that I, or any Bruin, have as much pull in the voting booth as any one of the financial sponsors of the debate, or either of the potential first ladies. Not only were we disregarded as students, but as members of the voting public. We, as the youth, are the future. It's attitudes like these that encourage apathy and make for a less than bright tomorrow.

Rinderle is a freshman majoring in psychology.

Pesticides: dangerous chemicals that can pose serious health risks

By Dennis G. Arguelles

Never before have I encountered reasoning as illogical as Mr. Patterson's in "The benefits of pesticide use are greater than the dangers" (Bruin, Oct. 13). No one denies the many benefits of pesticide use. In fact, Patterson makes several strong arguments for their continued use. At the same time, however, Patterson's theme is both appalling and dangerous.

First, to compare pesticides with over-the-counter medications and alcohol has no rational basis. Yes, both types substances pose risks, but the later are taken voluntarily and are only dangerous when misused. Farm workers, on the other hand, have no control over what type of pesticides are used when they are sprayed and in what quantities.

Furthermore, Patterson admits that farm workers work in conditions and have a standard of living below that of the "average American". He then justifies these conditions be saying, in effect, "So what. There are thousands of starving Third World immigrants who'll work under these conditions anyway." This mentality was shared by industrial moguls in the late nineteenth century when seven year old children were working in coal mines for 18 hours a day, six days a week. Most of the immigrants who end up in the fields have come to our country to escape war, poverty, political

News Analysis

The debate apparently went Republican way

By Donald M. Rothberg

Presidential rivals George Bush and Michael Dukakis Oct. 13 gave American voters a review of familiar themes, providing little drama in a debate that apparently went the Republican way.

Drama was not what Bush needed to protect his lead in the polls; it was Dukakis who needed a high voltage performance to propel his Democratic candidacy. It never happened.

As in their first debate, the Republican vice president was more animated and smiled more easily than did his Democratic rival, a fact that polls showed titled viewers his way during their Sept. 25 confrontation.

ABC's instant poll following this second televised confrontation indicated a lopsided preference for Bush, and an Associated Press panel of debate experts likewise delivered a verdict for the Republican. The first time around the same judges decided for Dukakis.

In a sense, it was clear the two candidates had learned from the first debate that they would be judged on two levels, not only on what they said but how they said it, on such intangible factors as body language.

Once the debate began, the candidates were on familiar terrain.

"Liberal, liberal, liberal," was Bush's favorite way of referring to his Democratic rival.

"If I had a dollar, George, for every time you used that label, I'd qualify for one of those tax breaks for the rich that you want to give away," said Dukakis, getting off one of his best lines of the evening.

The first question to Dukakis concerned his opposition to the death penalty and he quickly shifted the subject to drugs and made his familiar pledge to wage "a real war and no$a phony war against drugs."

And, of course, the debate no sooner ended than the partisans of both candidates swarmed into the press room to declare their favorite the winner and to claim the "liability factor," about which much was made after the first debate.

Democratic Sen. Alan Cransfon of California said Dukakis "overcame, the impression some people have had that he's too cold. . . . He's not a cold guy, he's a warm guy."

Former deputy Treasury secretary Richard Darman, who played the role of Dukakis during Bush debate preparations, said that on the question of likability, he thought Dukakis "didn't help himself tonight, probably that he hurt himself a little bit."

Rothberg is the chief political writer for The Associated Press.

QUAYLE: Lacks qualifications

Shouldn't we show at least the same care on choosing a president as we do when buying a car?

I wonder what Bob Dole and Alan Simpson's honest reactions were as they watched the man who was chosen over them to appear on the G.O.P. ticket perform during the debate. There they must have sat, two respected and intelligent men, watching Dan Quayle answering every question with someone else's words, unable to think on his own when he questions did not fit the script. Senator Simpson actually could not contain himself observing "I think he had five answers, and he used them over and over no matter what the question". If that was his comment toned down for the press, just imagine what an earful his confidantes got.

Why did George Bush choose this man? The only electable qualities he has are looks and a family name that brings with it money and connections. John F. Kennedy had youthful looks and family wealth, but that is where the similarities between the two cease. Not only was President Kennedy an accomplished student and a war hero, but he also published the critically acclaimed and Pulitzer Prize winning book "Profiles in Courage". He was known for his keen intelligence and uncanny ability to speak off the cuff. Check "none of the above" for the Senator from Indiana. Senator Quayle's inability to lead this country is not a liberal or conservative issue — it is a possibility that should frighten us all.

Legalizing drugs will save lives and money

By Alan J. Leahy

Few people will disagree with the fact that the current drug epidemic poses a substantial threat to American society. Recently however, there has been much debate regarding the methods needed in dealing with this problem. The discourse has essentially dichotimized into two schools of thought: criminalization and legalization. Yet, before arriving at either conclusion, it is critical that we understand the answer to this question: Why are drugs such a problem? Although the response to this question might appear elementary to some people, it is anything but self-evident to most.

Alcohol claims approximately 100,000 lives a year, while cigarettes claim about another 350,000 (through lung cancer, emphysema, etc. . .). However, in a one year period, only about 5-6,000 lives are lost to the intake of all illegal substances combined. In other words, the number of deaths directly related to the usage of illegal narcotics comprise only about 5-6% of those caused through alcohol abuse and approximately 1.5% of those killed by nicotine. So then, why do many Americans view the drug problem as the number one problem in our country today? It is because the war on drugs isn't working; in fact, the war only exacerbates the problem. Organized crime as well as street punks in city gangs are profiting while innocent victims are being cut down or robbed. An estimated 140 billion dollars of non-taxable income was made on the sale of illegal drugs last year and even cops, judges, politicians, etc. . . , are being corrupted in the process. American taxpayers on the other hand, paid out nearly 10 billion dollars in the attempt to combat this drug crime.

The American drug epidemic is undeniably such a major crisis due to the huge profits involved. The solution therefore is to eliminate these profits, and hence, put a damper on organized crime as well as eliminate the cornerstone of city gangs. Legalization would accomplish precisely this task. Drugs are not expensive to produce. As the supplier's risk diminishes and competition increases, the price of all drugs will plummet drastically. The money wasted on the current interdiction effort could then be reallocated towards better public education (to the ills of drug usage) as well as to drug rehabilitation centers. Even more preferrably, a drug consumption tax could generate enough revenue to cover these programs. At any rate, the police would then be able to concentrate more effectively on apprehending rapists and murderers, while those intent on self-mutilation could do so at less of an expense (both monetary and non-monetary) to society.

One commonly stated misperception of legalization is, that through it, the government will somehow be condoning the usage of drugs. Pornography is legal, yet I have never heard it stated that the U.S. government in any way advocates its sale or use. It is probable that with legalization, drug usage will initially increase. However, it is also more than likely that this increase will only be short term, whereas in the long run, usage will actually decrease. Through the education of the American public to the hazards of nicotine addiction, the number of cigarette smokers has steadily decreased over the last ten years. With the Surgeon General leading the fight, similar results can be predicted for all currently illegal drugs. Take away the illegality of drug use and the mysticism is reduced. Take away the immense profits, and the glamour and attraction will dissipate. I am not a libertarian who believes that people have the right to do whatever they want. I do however believe that drug interdiction can only continue to fail and that a new solution is urgently required to handle this epidemic. That solution is legalization.

The Bruin should pay attention to the facts

By Monti Rieman

Assumption is never a good thing. Especially when that assumption is aimed at discrediting a candidate for the Presidency of the United States of America.

Exception must be taken with the Daily Bruin article entitled "Dukakis may have worn fake emblem" (Bruin, Oct 14). The premise of the article was that Michael Dukakis was wearing an allegedly unauthorized UCLA sweatshirt in a picture run in the Thursday, Oct. 13 Los Angeles Times.

In the article, Richard Hopkins, Daily Bruin staff writer, interviewed Jack Revoyr, ASUCLA Licensing Administrator, who stated that the design in question was no longer used. He further stated that if the sweatshirt was printed within the last three years it was not authorized by ASUCLA.

Apparently, neither the Daily Bruin or Mr. Revoyr has been shopping in the Bearwear boutique of the Students' Store lately. During the first week of this quarter I purchased a T-shirt, incorporating the supposedly unauthorized small-scooped border design (the new design utilizes dots for a border), in the ASUCLA Student's Store.

After reading the article I decided to make a return visit to the Bearwear boutique of the student store. Not to my surprise, I discovered many articles of clothing, sweatshirts included, which still incorporated the old design, supposedly discontinued over three years ago.

Authorized manufacturers of ASUCLA licensed clothing distribute their goods world wide. It makes good intuitive sense that if our own student store still carries the old design, then other supplier's inventory the world over would still contain the old design.

Additionally, the missed point of the article is that Michael Dukakis was wearing a UCLA sweatshirt for the whole world to see; and as a UCLA student it made me proud. Proud that a candidate for the Presidency would wear our logo. Even if the shirt was an unauthorized one, which I sincerely doubt, how would an honest purchaser know. According to the article, the shirt I purchased, as scant two weeks ago, here at UCLA.

All too often the media, apparently the Daily Bruin included, looks for controversy, suffering, and scandal to run articles. It is incumbent for the press, the Daily Bruin included, to check it's facts before running an article. How difficult would it have been for the author or one of the editors to make a visit from Kerckhoff to the student store, a mere 300 yard trek, at best. At once upon entering the Bearwear boutique, they would have seen that the story was with out merit, and it would have been immediately killed.

On closing, I must echo the words of George Bush in Thursday night's debate, when he stated that the press glossed over the candidate's position papers and positive actions; instead, opting for useless opinion polls and controversy. It is time for the press to take responsibility for their actions and to report the news to the American people, not fabricate it.

PESTICIDES: threaten health persecution and famine. They often have no education, do not speak English and have little more than the clothes they are wearing. For these immigrants, a livelihood outside the fields is a dim prospect. To then knowingly expose these people to hazardous or even just potentially hazardous chemicals is a type of exploitation surpassed only by slavery. Concluding that people will work under these conditions anyway because of their socio-economic situation is an insult to human dignity.

Patterson then compares farm workers to other members of the work force, contending that all professions contain some element risk. "These people continue to work because they feel adequately compensated for their risk." says Patterson. Yet Patterson has already admitted that farm workers live below the level of the average American. Is this adequate compensation for the risks they take when working around the five pesticides on the United Farm Workers boycott list?

To argue that the five pesticides on the U.F.W. list are not hazardous is one thing, but to claim that the U.F.W. and Cesar Chavez have hidden motives is another. I attended a U.F.W. rally in 1986 when, according to Chavez, the boycott (which had already existed for several years) had reduced table grape sales by between 4-6%. Back then the agribusiness industry challenged the boycott solely on the grounds that the five pesticides were not hazardous. Today, with the boycott affecting grape sales more significantly, gaining the support of prominent national leaders and now the center of media attention, agribusiness supporters are suddenly crying fraud. Why is it just now that such allegations have surfaced?

Patterson claims that the question of whether or not the pesticides cause cancer is not relevant. This maybe the only part of his argument which is relevant. The rest of his article is an attempt to analyze the use of these pesticides according to a simplistic cost-benefit equation. Let's just remember that the "cost" in this equation is measured in human lives.

Mort Sahl

Comedian Mort Sahl conquers Westwood

By William Quinn, Senior Staff Writer

■ THEATER: Mort Sahl at the Westwood Playhouse. 10886 Le Conte Ave. Mondays and Tuesdays only through Oct. 25. Seats $17.50, students $10. (213) 208-6500 for more information.

To reverse a recent George Bush characterization, Mort Sahl is the man who has savaged seven American administrations. He rose to prominence during the "button-down" era of comedy at San Francisco's legendary coffee house, The Hungry I.

Eisenhower and Nixon were his targets then. Consequently he has often been identified with John F. Kennedy, being a frequent guest at the White House during the Camelot days.

Perhaps he became too identified with JFK. Certainly he was one of the first to savage American policy toward Vietnam — and so prematurely (i.e., before the rest of the national media caught up) that he fell out of favor and his top-flight career went into a long decline. Certainly he has never been as influential as in the days when he was a Playboy Magazine feature interview in the late 1960s.

He has never stopped working, however: mostly clubs, and last year on a theater tour that took him to Broadway and an appearance on 60 Minutes.

Last week he opened a three-week engagement (Monday and Tuesday nights only) at the Westwood Playhouse, ending Oct. 25.

Sparing neither the Republicans nor the Democrats, Mort Sahl walked on and began launching ripostes about the current Presidential campaign and the candidates.

In the mouth of Jesse Jackson, described as a man of the cloth — cashmere! — Martin Luther King's famous catch phrase becomes "I have a scheme!"

Conservatives are described as "Feeling they deserve everything they ever stole," but he also characterizes liberals as, "wanting everything too but feeling guilty about it."

He quotes Dan Quayle: "We wouldn't have Jane Fonda in OUR party." Sure, Sahl adds, she was in Vietnam and he wasn't. "But of course the National Guard saw service — at Kent State" (where they fired on students protesting the war and killed four in the early 1970s). Or Quayle saying, "My grandmother can lick your old man."

The Balancing Act thrives through conflict

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

Somewhere deep in the heart of Universal City, one of L.A.'s finest musical talents, the Balancing Act, has a minor dilemma on their hands.

"Everyone here at the I.R.S. Records office is trying to drum up a speaker phone," says the somewhat-concerned Steve Wagner in a recent phone interview.

In the background, Jeff Davis is frantically yelling, "A speaker phone! A speaker phone! Do we have a speaker phone?!"

So this is the type of technical difficulties bands encounter. Well, after five minutes of what seemed like utter chaos — numerous voices mumbling, feet shuffling, etc. — the speaker phone became operational.

As Steve assured, "The speaker phone is working! Now as soon as we can get rid of these people in here . . . I think we have the entire I.R.S. staff in here to teach us how to use the phone."

For those not familiar with these local boys who've made good, the Balancing Act — with Steve (bass, acoustic guitars, vocals), Jeff (guitars, vocals), Robert Blackmon (drums, percussion, vocals) and Willie Aron (lead guitar, melodica, keyboards, vocals) — began their "risk taking" journey back in late '84.

Jeff reminisces on the beginning. "When we formed the band, we really didn't know how to play our instruments. We really didn't know how to sing that well. We really didn't know how to write songs that well. We were doing it for the pleasure of learning and playing music with friends."

Nevertheless, "the pleasure of learning" has brought the Balancing Act one E.P., New Campfire Songs, and two albums, Three Squares and a Roof and the current release Curtains (all on I.R.S), further ahead in such a competitive industry. The Balancing Act will appear at the Roxy this Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. with Victoria Williams and Milo Binder.

"I think it was through this process of learning that the Balancing Act is improving. It's just like anything else — the more you do something, the more you learn. It's really the whole idea behind the band," Jeff adds.

Steve decides it's his turn to jump in the conversation. "Yeah, I think in our early material, we were just writing songs and learning to write songs."

Jeff interrupts to make a quick defense. "Although, I think our earlier songs were very good. But I think they worked more towards being off-the-wall."

In agreement, Steve continued. "Yeah, now we're writing songs specifically for the Balancing Act."

So the emphasis has been more to the band and less towards the "pleasure" days. Whatever way the Balancing Act is approaching their music, the results are all positive. The new album is a blending of acoustic and electric, past and present, experimental and mainstream. Curtains is not the typical album, nor is the Balancing Act the typical band which makes it.

From listening to the Balancing Act, one probably can guess some of the foundations which shaped this band into its present form — namely George Clinton (a cover of the Funkadelic tune "Can You Get to that" is featured on Curtains), a little Simon and Garfunkel, Neil

Graduate films to be screened at Melnitz

By Barbara Archer, Contributor

■ FILM: Work of Film Graduate Students. Monday, Oct. 17. Melnitz Theater at 7:30 p.m. Free admission.

The innovative work of four UCLA film graduate students will be showcased tonight at Melnitz Theater. Three films represent the filmmakers' second project in the film graduate program, while one is the filmmakers' thesis film.

Radio Inside, by Jeffrey Bell, is a stream of consciousness film shot in black and white whose protagonist muses about the commercialization of Christianity and stealing his brother's girlfriend. Pamela Beere Briggs' Out of the Rain tells the story of two women who through the gesture of sharing a cup of tea deal with their loneliness. The Gossips, a film by Andre Burke, is described as "a fractured tale of infidelity, murder, and smelly feet." The fourth film in the series, by John Diminico, tells of a magic bracelet which changes the lives of everyone with whom it comes in contact.

All four films were shot by cinematographer William McDonald. For a refreshing look into new film concepts, check it out.

All-female 'Steel Magnolias' is enlightening comedy

By Alex Chun
Contributor

■ THEATER: Steel Magnolias. At the Pasadena Playhouse, 39 South El Molino Avenue, Pasadena. Performances are: Tuesday-Friday 8:00 p.m., Saturday 5:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m., and Sunday 2:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. Tickets are available at the Pasadena Playhouse box office or by phoning (818) 356-PLAY. Runs through Oct. 29.

Why is it that women are always trekking to their local beauty salons? It's not merely to get their hair done. Au contraire, they're there to gossip — the premise of Robert Harling's marvelous new play Steel Magnolias, now running at the Pasadena Playhouse.

Directed by Pamela Berlin and starring an all-female cast, Steel Magnolias is an enlightening comedy that exposes the well-kept secrets that transpire within the strictly womanly confines of a typically Southern beauty salon.

Steel Magnolia's salon's particular proprietor and chief hair dresser/artist is Truvy (Ronnie Claire Edwards), an amiable motherly type who lives off the fact that "there is no such thing as natural beauty."

In contrast, her new apprentice is the eternally youthful Annelle (Dana Hill), who transforms herself from everything from a walking Christmas tree, complete with pointsetta earrings and green eyeliner, to an ardently conservative Born-again Christian.

The salon's primary clientele consists of the former Mayor's widow Clairee (Eve Brent), the head booster for the local high school football team, Shelby (Tracy Shaffer), a soon-to-be Mrs. whose vices include a fetish for pink, M'Lynn Eatenton (Barbara Rush), Shelby's pessimistic and concerned mother, and Carole Cook as Oiser (pronounced wee-zer), the Eatentons' demonic neighbor and dog enthusiast.

This voluble sextet covers the entire gamut of topics relevant to a group of busy-bodies in a small town; everything and anything is fair game. Clairee for example recites a humorous account of her favorite nephew breaking some traumatizing news to his parents: "He told them he had a brain tumor and had only three weeks to live and then he turned around and said 'just kidding, I'm only gay!' "

When they're not analyzing other people's lives, they're playing among themselves. Never for a moment is there any let-up in the energy of their discourse — the constant bickering, bantering, debating, and insulting. There is, however, never any doubt that this inner-circle of women are the closest of friends.

But this loyalty is strained to the limit by the strikingly straightforward Ouiser. From the moment she storms in, because her prized collie has gone bald, all are immediately aware that she's a force to be reckoned with. As a cynical old coot, Ouiser introspectively states, "I'm not crazy, I must've been in a very bad mood for 40 years." But when the large-framed Cook plays coy when an old flame reappears, Clairee eloquently blurts out, "Instead of playing hard to get, she should be playing beat the clock."

After a delightfully light and comical first act, the play shifts into a tone of seriousness when in the second half of show Shelby, who is a diabetic, announces her pregnancy, although she was warned against it. This, coupled with her increasingly dissatisfying marital life (to a husbands whose philosophy in life is that "you either shoot it, stuff it, or marry it"), commences the crumbling of Shelby's once fairy-tale life — shattering the serenity of the once harmonious salon.

But while Shelby feels the physical pain, it's Shelby's mother who must suffer the mental anguish. Rush's role is by far the most demanding; her emotions are bounced from the heights of ecstasy to the depths of despair. She must mediate between what's right for her daughter and what her daughter feels is right for herself.

She has to balance the prospects of a wonderful blessing coming into the world with the

THE CLASS OF '52 COULDN'T SEE INTO THE FUTURE

Folks here are still talking about "The 1952 Incident." For some reason still unknown, a certain graduating class at a certain university missed what was certainly the opportunity of a lifetime.

The chance to meet with a recruiter from the National Security Agency.

Maybe they were busy that day. Maybe something else caught their eye. But the fact remains, a meeting with NSA could have meant a future full of challenging, exciting projects.

Now you've got the same chance. Our recruiter will be visiting campus soon in search of talented mathematicians, computer scientists, electrical engineers and linguists. And we're looking for people who want to work on important, hands-on assignments right from the start of their career.

NSA is the agency responsible for producing foreign intelligence information, safeguarding our government's communications and securing computer systems for the Department of Defense.

And we're equally committed to helping you make your future strong. So do yourself a favor and meet with us. You don't need 3-D glasses to see that it's a great opportunity.

NSA will be on campus November 8 interviewing seniors majoring in Electrical Engineering, Computer Science, Math and Language (Slavic, Near Eastern, Asian and Spanish).

Siouxsie's refreshing, nocturnal 'Peep Show'

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

■ ALBUM: Peep Show. Siouxsie and the Banshees. Geffen Records.

What year is it? 1988, right?

That makes Siouxsie and the Banshees 12 years old. Twelve years, you say?

That's right, and I bet some of readers out there still haven't heard of the sensually soothing, and sometimes violent sounds, of Siouxsie and her nocturnal Banshees.

Then I have some explaining to do.

Way back in '76, a dynamic singer/songwriter and an equally talented, and also unknown, bassist/songwriter named Steve Severin debuted their creation, Siouxsie and the Banshees, with yet another unknown who called himself Sid Vicious and played drums (You guessed it! That's the same Sid who went on to

The Fountainhead's peaceful 'Voice'

By Rob Winfield

■ ALBUM: Voice of Reason. The Fountainhead. Polygram Records.

Welcome to Irish culture again. No! This isn't the new U2 album. Nor is it anything like the Pogues, That Petrol Emotion, etc . . . This is a duo known simply as the Fountainhead.

What exactly is a Fountainhead? Got me, literal translations aren't my specialty. What I do know is that Pat O'Donnell and Steve Belton, writing and performing all the Fountainhead's music, have crafted quite an ingenious bit of pop/rock titled Voice of Reason.

And for their second U.S. pressing, they've developed a maturity for defined and refined sound. This is one of those "Cool music, dude!" albums, yet one can't find a reason for

BALANCING: Music

Young, John Cale and Brian Wilson.

However, comparisons are not what the Balancing Act desires, or even cares for. "I think any group of people you get together to form a band is going to be different than any other group of people — unless, of course, you've got five bands who say they're all going to model ourselves after, say, Scritti Politti or something like that. We have four different individuals in the band with four different personalities. And the Balancing Act is the result of this."

Steve, as expected, shares a similar opinion. "Everybody has the opportunity to do what you can do in a band: you can write songs, you can play different instruments, you can sing. It's like anyone can contribute as much, or as little, as they want."

And Jeff sums it all up. "Any band that is going to be original is going to be the result of personality."

From speaking with Steve and Jeff, one would never discern that the two constantly fight, as similarly Robert and Willie do, over the manner in which a song should be written.

Jeff immediately states, "We have conflicts all the time. Sure."

And if anyone's thinking this would be a hindrance to their ability to function as a band, wrong.

"That's just one of the conditions of the way we work. A lot of people outside of the band can't believe we work that way. There's bound to be a lot of disagreement, hurt feelings, and stuff like that," Steve elaborates.

And pausing in thought for a moment, he continues. "It's not the most efficient way to work. But it ends up being the most satisfying to us because everyone in the band feels like they're a part of the process."

Jeff adds, "Also, I think it pushes each one of us to be that much better — to work that much harder. It pulls us away from our weaknesses and pushes us towards our strengths."

The strengths of the Balancing Act are gaining as is their confidence with the latest release Curtains. The new album deals on an "easy to relate to" level of personal conflicts and resolutions. Steve agrees on this point. "I think as you get more confident as a songwriter, you start dealing with things in a more personal way. It's just a little more closer to home. And I'm not afraid of writing about things like that, now."

Steve pauses for another moment, but feels he needs to say more. "To me, I think that's the way you're going to change lives — on a personal level. Each person lives their lives according to their ideals or principles. I think, in the songs that I write, I deal with that sort of personal conflict and struggle."

With the more personal themes comes a more coherent songwriting ability. And Steve chooses to comment again. "Some of our earlier stuff was more obscure — just kind of confusing. We were confused then, but I think our writing has become a lot clearer. I don't think it was intentional to become better writers. I think you just get better at communicating ideas with more experience."

Jeff obviously isn't getting a word in. So he yells in his loudest voice, "But I'm confused!" to break the serious nature. Steve got the picture.

The Balancing definitely has a grip on themselves. They're not too overconfident, nor do they feel inferior to the vast musical environment surrounding them. As Steve injects, "I think we are already successful — far beyond what I ever imagined."

However, that's not enough for Jeff. "We hope to be brilliant in all respects."

It's true! They do thrive from disagreement. Here's to hoping the Balancing Act continues to argue. For as long as they argue, their music will persist to the "brilliance" that Jeff hopes for.

The Kinks' Ray Davies mixes theater, film, rock

By Mary Campbell
Associated Press

Earlier this year, the Kinks brought out The Road, a collection of songs, mostly from the 1980s, recorded live during a 1987 U.S. tour.

Now, Kinks songwriter Ray Davies is in California, where a musical comedy he composed, 80 Days, is playing at the La Jolla Playhouse. The album, the British group's second for MCA Records, was taped in Columbia, Md., and Philadelphia. The title song was recorded in a studio. The song "It" is new, composed by Davies as a dance for his wife, Pat Crosbie, formerly with the Irish National Ballet. He'd like to expand it so it becomes one side of an album.

Recently, the Kinks did some recording for the next album, but that has paused while Davies works on 80 Days.

"I had seen the movie Around the World in 80 Days when I was a kid," Davies says. "I wasn't that interested in it. But the show is really more about Jules Verne himself. He was the Steven Spielberg of the Victorian era.

"The director, Des McAnuff, who did Big River (based on Huckleberry Finn) sent me a telegram saying, 'Broadway needs you,' which I thought was rather a nice introduction to the project.

"He sent me a draft script somebody had done. We got to talking about it. I wrote what I thought a few good tunes would be. He liked them. He got a bookwriter. I wasn't interested in doing David Niven (star of the movie) with music. This project has been going on for four years. You can't rush these things."

Davies wrote one previous musical, which was rushed, for a small English company in 1982. "I had to write it in two weeks. It was a bizarre plot of out-of-work women in east London kidnapping Prince Charles. It was commissioned by the National Theater, by Sir Peter Hall. He wanted a modern version of The Poet and the Women, where the women kidnap Aristophanes.

"It was good writing the song for Prince Charles, a patriotic song about England. It was offbeat, fun and campy. It was a daunting task to write it in two weeks."

He wrote music for the films The Virgin Soldiers and Percy. He says, "We fired our manager just after that. We had a top-10

SAHL: Devastating wit

Sahl said "people are frightened about Quayle being 'one heartbeat away from the Presidency,' which is quite an assumption about Bush" (i.e., Bush? What heart?).

Sahl got one of his biggest laughs simply repeating one of Bush's lines from his convention speech, "I'm a quiet man who hears the quiet people in 1,000 points of light," followed by a loud snicker.

At the convention, when Bush said we have to get rid of the baggage of racial discrimination, Sahl fantasizes a delegate plaintively whining, "Can we keep one small carry-on?"

Don't like what he says about your candidate? Stick around — He'll get to the other guy in a minute. 1980s' Democrats are characterized as being like "the Vichy Government" (they ran France for the Nazis during the Occupation).

Of course, the veteran comic commentator ranges beyond politics.

The New Hollywood: "They used to think Clint Eastwood was a lousy actor — until they saw Chuck Bronson. Then they thought Bronson was a lousy actor — until they saw Sylvester Stallone. Now that they've seen Arnold Schwarzenegger, they think Chuck Norris should have played Gandhi."

On media, while taping an upcoming 60 Minutes interrogation by Mike Wallace (which aired last year), Sahl quotes Mike Wallace: "You're not funny anymore. You've developed a messianic complex." Sahl implied he was dubious about the comparison, saying historically that had proved to be a highly unrewarding role.

Wallace said, "Who do you mean?" and stopped tape while aides brought him a slip of paper on which was written, "Jim Jones?"

On marriage: Women don't want to get married today. Of course, men never did. Actually, nobody wants to get married today — except the occasional Catholic priest."

But Sahl always returns to politics. He explains with an overriding (again) cynicism why he endorsed Al Haig for President after he "threw his helmet into the ring." Basically, he said, he got so tired of politicians making promises then breaking them — he figured he'd vote for one who promised the opposite of what he wanted in hopes of a double cross.

"I mean, Nixon said the last thing he'd ever do was recognize Red China — and it turned out to be the last thing he did!"

Obviously a national treasure who punctures the egos of anybody in government and still gets invited to the White House by residents of any Party, Sahl may be above criticism.

However, after highly topical beginnings about the current campaign, last Tuesday the act reached a long plateau of old material involving a recounting of his work for Robert Redford as a writer on Ordinary People, and a confrontation between Vanessa Redgrave and Clint Eastwood which also must have taken place in the mid-'70s.

And it is true he is basically a night club comic, despite the quality of his jokes. Stories that might have been fascinating were they continued (like the Wallace interview) are abandoned as soon as they reach a punchline.

But the dull stretches are relieved by his outlook and the cast of characters he has met and entertained through the years.

One of the best stories he told was about a recent White House dinner in a crowd that included new Japanese head of state, Mr. Takeshida, and Lee Iacocca. He sets up a story about President Reagan jawboning with Takeshida about auto import quotas ("An aide steps in and gives Reagan a 3 x 5 card containing our entire trade policy on it") with a whispered aside from Iacocca.

"These guys (the Japanese) will step on your throat to make a buck and if that doesn't work, they bring up Hiroshima!"

Sure enough, when Reagan says we must have import concessions, Takeshida says, "have you ever had one of your major cities bombed like Hiroshima?"

"How about Detroit?," snaps Reagan.

You ought to see Mort Sahl while he is so close at hand and at such a reasonable price. He will be talked about well into the next century, like Will Rogers is still remembered.

DAVIES: '80 Days'

hit in America, 'Lola,' at the time. Instead of putting us on tour here, he said we should do the Percy soundtrack. I wrote a fantastic piece of music. The producer got a knife and cut everything. My music was completely butchered."

"I was approached to write an experimental play with music. So I wrote a play where the lead character didn't speak. I ended up directing Kenneth Colley, a Shakespearean actor, using sign language, exploiting every facet of his face. I felt it was like doing a silent movie."

In the 1960s, when the Kinks had strings of hit singles, they'd put all their equipment into a truck and tour in Britain on weekends.

Now, Davies says, "Bands like Def Leppard tour 18 months and never make a record for four years. They're completely exhausted.

"And I can't decide to go play in Truro and get equipment together. I have to hire about 30 people and it's all a big deal.

"We still play requests, which sends the light and sound crew mad. They like to have the show rehearsed."

The Kinks were formed in 1964 with Davies as lead vocalist and guitarist, Dave Davies on lead guitar and vocals, Peter Quaife on bass and Mick Avory on drums. The current lineup is the Davies brothers, Ian Gibbons, keyboards, Jim Rodford, bass, and Bob Henrit, drums.

Davies says, "It would be nice for the Kinks to be on Broadway for a week and do a week in Boston rather than doing one-nighters. Next year will be our 25th year.

"The concert we did in London Dec. 22 was one of the best ever. We played three hours solid, with no intermission and no popcorn. We used some of that footage in the Road video. The video also has stuff from the '60s and '70s.

"I've got enough footage to make an 8-hour film about the Kinks. I'll settle for an hour and a half."

Davies believes that the best ballad he ever wrote was "Waterloo Sunset" and the two best rockers were "You Really Got Me," which Van Halen covered, and "All Day and All rage she feels over her daughter's recklessness. As with all mothers and daughters, there are the usual debates, but this time the debates concern Shelby's life.

The play moves smartly along from start to finish; from the day of Shelby's wedding to Shelby's impending medical crisis. And through it all the network of women remains constant (with the exception of Annelle and her changing hairstyles and beliefs) and faithful.

While there is much tragedy, it is in actuality nothing more than sobering reality. Life is not just fun and games, but a place like the beauty parlor — an unflagging social circle and second family that can always be a place to go in times of good and/or bad.

If the Playhouse could just get four Steel Magnolias a year, it would have it made. What else can be said about Steel Magnolias other than that it has it all: a touch of comedy, a touch of drama, and a most entertaining gaggle of ladies. The perfect play for the Playhouse, Steel Magnolias is determined not to disappoint.

Siouxsie

form the influential Sex Pistols, o.d. on heroin, and have a major motion picture made about him and his cocky girlfriend Nancy).

Obviously, Siouxsie and Steve had something big, as twelve years later, the band has released its eighth album of original material, Peep Show. There's eleven in all, with the other three consisting of an entire collection of cover tracks, Through the Looking Glass, a greatest hits album (more politely put, a compilation) titled Once Upon a Time — The Singles, and a live double album called — quite appropriately — Nocturne.

And over those twelve years, Siouxsie picked up drummer Budgie (of course, after Sid left to live a life of infamy). And as far as guitarists go, these Brits have had as many as albums, or so it seems. An interesting side note was the appearance of Robert Smith (That's right! He's in the Cure) as guitarist for the *Nocturne*tour and the eighth album Hyena.

Anyway, the last guitarist, John Valentine Carruthers, was given the boot and replaced with former Specimen guitarist Jon Klein. And here's something new, a keyboardist/celloist named Martin McCarick. That makes Siouxsie a five-piece, as opposed to the traditional four. That's right! Count them — five members.

Well, for an old-timer, Siouxsie and her Banshees are still carrying out the tradition which has lasted for the last twelve years — always throwing the element of surprise in each and every album. And Peep Show is no exception (But you probably knew I was going to say that anyway).

Peep Show is an entirely new concept for Siouxsie — simple melodies, three or four chord arcangements. You see, Siouxsie's been one for overwhelming the senses with complexity — sort of a barrage of unrestrained sound.

Here, we have an album that not only returns to basics, but succeeds overwhelmingly. This is Siouxsie at her refined finest. This isn't the Siouxsie that assaulted the listener in '79 with the raw energy of their first album The Scream. This isn't even the Siouxsie who went psychedelic with the eighth album Hyena. Don't get me wrong. Those were fine days for Siouxsie. But the past is the past.

Peep Show is Siouxsie's dissertation, taking all the band has learned and applying to their eleventh wonder.

'Voice'

its "coolness." Is it the guitar, the bass, the songwriting, the vocals? I suppose it's all of these and none of these.

This is just plain great music. There really doesn't need to be a reason, anyway. It catches the ear and that's all that really matters. It's sort of like the Cocteau Twins or This Mortal Coil — although it doesn't sound like the Cocteau Twins or This Mortal Coil. I don't want to attempt definition because it's probably been said before and nobody really cares anyway. Like I said, it's just plain great music.

Personally, the Fountainhead reminds me of those star-filled lonely nights driving up I-5. One just kind of drifts away in this daze — similar to what I'm doing now — and starts seeing bridges, and stuff like that, that's not really there.

Anyway, back to the album review.

The two singles highlighted on the little peel-away sticker on the cover are "Someone Like You" and "Angel." Both are very strong standouts. To me, though, everything on this album is a standout. Voice of Reason is a solid piece of musical construction. Form the surface, it's very basic in audio textures. Yet as one presents a closer examination, the structure appears incredibly complex.

One of my favs (it's always "One of my favs") is "Driving in My Car," a perfect lonesome midnight road song. Ha! My I-5 story isn't quite as wigged-out as some of you readers might think!

I could list more song titles for your reading pleasure, but I think my point's been made — in a unique fashion, but it's been made.

The Fountainhead is another pleasant offering from the Irish. They're not the gods (cough, cough) that U2 has become, or believe themselves to be. Nor do they share the insanity that those other Irish bands, like the Pogues, display.

This is a mellifluous, melodical journey into the peaceful, and sometimes lonely world, of the Voice of Reason.

of the Night,'' which the Stranglers covered. "Now when we play 'You Really Got Me,' new audiences think we're covering the Van Halen song."

Asked whether he has mellowed with age, Davies recounts a letter from a nephew stating he was angry, discontent, jealous, wants to achieve everything and feels there's no time. It ended: "Uncle Raymond, what are you like?"

He says, "I wrote a note back saying, 'Ditto.' I'm still as hungry for success. I take failure hard. I'm competitive. That's the one aspect of my personality I try to fight against.

"I've been ordered to mellow out several times in my life. I finish one project. The phone rings and I start another. If the phone didn't ring, I'd start one myself.

"I get passionate about what I do. I think the older you get the less mellow you get, really. You get angrier."

Mystery ends with a twist

■ NOVEL: The Baxter Trust. By J.P. Hailey. Donald I. Fine. 256 Pages. $17.95.

At 35, Steve Winslow is in a rut. He tried his hand at acting. No go. He tried being a lawyer. He blew it. Now, he drives a cab in New York City.

A real loser, right? Wrong. For, miracle of miracles, a damsel in deep distress and badly in need of a mouthpiece opens the telephone book and finds Winslow's name in the lawyer section. She calls him. And, over he comes, with shoulder-length hair, and wearing blue jeans, a tan corduroy jacket and a green tie.

When she answers the door, the girl, Sheila Benton, blinks and blinks again. But she hires Winslow anyway and it's a good thing she does. A corpse has been found in Sheila's apartment, stabbed in the back. Sheila says she didn't do it and doesn't even know the dead man. But the cops think she did and arrest her, even though they treat her very nicely because she is one of the heirs to a multimillion-dollar trust and niece of one of the most powerful men in the city.

Winslow's efforts to vindicate Sheila are largely what "The Baxter Trust" is all about, and writer J.P. Hailey has done a fine job of detailing a murder mystery that contains some of the best courtroom dialogue put down in a very long time. His scenes out of court are good, but those taking place in court are superb. Truly, a virtuoso performance, and one that allows Winslow, who has never been in court before, to demonstrate he is not the pushover the prosecution thinks he is.

As to who did the dirty deed — well, Winslow pursues a lot of false leads and comes up with a number of interesting theories that have the reader hopping all over the place. But author Hailey knows very well what he is doing and he resolves everything nicely in an unexpected yet most logical ending.
